But if any among you, though agreeing in these statements, thinks that Philip will maintain his power, by having occupied forts and havens and the like, this is a mistake. Impossible is it—impossible, Athenians,—to acquire a solid power by injustice, and perjury, and falsehood. Such things last for once, or for a short period, may be they blossom fairly with hope; but in time they are discovered, and drop away. As a house, a ship or the like, ought to have the lowest parts firmest, so in human conduct, I ween, the principle and foundation should be just and true.—DEMOSTHENES—SECOND OLYNTHIAC.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTIETH, NINETEENTH CAVALRY.

ON the 2d of June, 1863, an order was issued from the War Department to Alexander Cummings, a citizen of Philadelphia, to recruit a regiment of cavalry for three years' service. Recruiting was immediately commenced, and with the exception of companies L and M, which were from the counties of Huntingdon and Blair, recruits were principally obtained in Philadelphia. The regiment was organized at Camp Stanton, near Girard College, Philadelphia, with the following field officers: Alexander Cummings, Colonel; Joseph C. Hess, Lieutenant Colonel; Amos J. Holahan, and Norman M. Finlay, Majors. Most of the men, and all the officers, except one, had seen service. On the 5th of November the First Battalion, under command of Major Holahan, started for Washington, and three days after, the balance of the regiment, under Lieutenant Colonel Hess, followed. Upon its arrival, it was reported to General Stoneman, and on the 13th, was ordered to proceed to Eastport, Mississippi, and join the army of General Sherman. While en route, its destination was changed to Columbus, Kentucky, where it arrived on the 3d of December, and joined the command of General A. J. Smith. Three days afterwards it moved to Union City, Tennessee, where it was assigned to the First Brigade of the cavalry division, commanded by General B. H. Grierson, and was associated with the Fourth Missouri, Second Illinois, Seventh Indiana, and Second New Jersey Cavalry regiments, commanded by Colonel George E. Waring. Soon after taking the field, Colonel Cummings was ordered to detached service, and the command of the regiment devolved on Lieutenant Colonel Hess. On the 18th of January, 1864, the brigade was ordered to Colliersville, where a cavalry force was concentrating, under command of General W. S. Smith, intended to operate on the flank of General Sherman's army, about to move from Vicksburg, for the destruction of railroads centering at Jackson and Meridian, and the immense supplies of grain which had been accumulated along the line of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. The march to Colliersville, on account of bad roads and swollen streams, was exceedingly tedious, so much so, that the brigade did not reach its destination until the 5th of February. General Grierson, with two brigades, set out on the 10th, keeping to the west of the Mississippi Central Railroad, while Colonel Waring, who followed on the 11th, moved upon the east. On the 19th, a detail of one hundred picked men of the regiment, under Major Holahan, made a dash upon the town of Egypt, drove out the rebel guards, destroyed two bridges, a portion of the railroad track, and immense quantities of corn and supplies for the rebel army. The division continued the march along the line of railway, destroying depots of grain as it went, until the 20th, when the enemy, in force, was first met, and was driven, a running fight being kept up during the entire day. At evening he was pushed across the Tombigbee, and the command went into camp at West Point. It is estimated that three millions of bushels of corn, and three thousand bales of cotton, were destroyed on this march. On the following day, a retrograde movement was commenced, and the enemy followed closely, harassing the rear of the column. At Joy Farm, on the afternoon of the 22d, the enemy charged with great impetuosity. The First Brigade was in line and ready to receive him, and as he came within range, poured in a withering fire, and delivered a counter-charge which swept him from the field, killing and wounding many, and scattering his forces. The march was then resumed, and continued with little further interruption, until the command reached Memphis. The loss in the Nineteenth, on this expedition, was fifteen in killed, wounded, and missing.

On the 6th of April the brigade, now much reduced by the absence of its members on veteran furlough, was sent to harass Forrest, moving for his Fort Pillow slaughter. Too weak to give battle, the brigade could only impede his progress. At Cypress Swamp, Lieutenant Colonel Hess, with his own, and a battalion of the Seventh Indiana, attacked the enemy, and from noon until night-fall, a succession of charges, and counter-charges, was kept up. At evening the command was withdrawn, the Nineteenth having sustained only small loss in killed and wounded. Captain James E. Wenrick was taken prisoner, and died while in captivity, at Columbia, South Carolina. The command returned to camp at Memphis, on the 10th. Details from the regiment were almost daily sent out for scout and picket duty, in one of which, under command of Sergeant John Dunlap, a number of men were lost, in killed and missing, the Sergeant, himself, being among the latter. In the engagement at Bolivar, on the 2d of May, the rear-guard of Forrest was struck by a detachment of the First Brigade, under Colonel Karge, and driven across the Hatchie River. Forrest made good his escape, and the Union forces, which were under the command of General Sturgis, returned to Memphis. Early in June, Sturgis again moved with all his forces against Forrest, and met him at Guntown. After a severe battle, Sturgis was driven back, sustaining great loss in men and material. The Nineteenth acted with the infantry in this engagement, and did good service in repelling the attacks of the enemy, while on the retreat. It lost fifteen in killed, wounded, and missing, Lieutenant Murray being among the wounded.

On the 4th of July, a detachment of one hundred and fifty men, with similar detachments from other regiments in the brigade, all under command of Colonel Karge, moved by water to Vicksburg, and thence marched in conjunction with the forces of General Slocum, for a diversion in favor of General A. J. Smith, then moving from Memphis. At the Big Black, Port Gibson, and Grand Gulf, the enemy was met, and spirited actions ensued, in which the detachment of the Nineteenth rendered good service, and afterwards returned with the command to Vicksburg. Early in August, General Smith again led his forces against Forrest, and the cavalry had warm engagements at Cold-water, Hurricane Creek, and Oxford. Soon after its return to camp, a detachment of the brigade, in which the Nineteenth was included, under Colonel Karge, was sent to Little Rock, Arkansas, and thence via Cape Girardeau, to Independence, Missouri, being engaged in the general movement against General Sterling Price. While upon this expedition, the regiment participated in engagements at Marion, Greensboro, Pilot Knob, Osage, and the Big Blue River. In the latter engagement, the Nineteenth joined in a sabre charge, which contributed largely to the victory which was there achieved. After a campaign signalized by great activity, the detachment returned to Memphis, arriving on the 20th of October. During the greater part of the month of November, the regiment operated with the cavalry upon the flank of General Hood's army, who was now moving northward towards Nashville. On the 20th, Lieutenant Maurice E. Fagan, with company F, met a superior force of the enemy at Noncon Creek, and after a desperate hand-to-hand conflict, in which the sabre was freely used, drove him, inflicting severe loss.

On the 26th of November, the regiment moved by transport from Memphis, to Nashville, Tennessee, for the reinforcement of General Thomas, who was now threatened by the near approach of Hood. It arrived on the 3d of December, and was assigned to the First Brigade, Seventh Division, in which it was associated with the Second and Fourth Tennessee, Eleventh and Twelfth Indiana, and the Fourteenth Ohio Battery, commanded by General J. H. Hammond. On the 12th, the regiment crossed the river, and encamped in rear of the Union trenches on the Charlotte Pike. At four o'clock on the morning of the 15th, the cavalry took position on the right wing of Thomas' combined army, in position and ready to attack, and an hour later, dismounted and moved to the assault. The battle soon became general along the entire line. The enemy's left was broken and pressed back upon his centre, when the cavalry mounted and swept the rebel flank and rear, driving it in rout until night-fall. Shortly after daylight on the following morning, the Nineteenth was led out upon a reconnoissance, and at a point mid way between the Hardin and Granny White pikes, struck a force of the enemy, and at once attacked his out-posts, killing and wounding a number, and taking some prisoners. Skirmishing was kept up for several hours, when, it having been ascertained that the enemy was advancing in force, General Nelson, who was in position on the Hardin Pike, a mile in rear, moved forward and opened the battle. At first the enemy was forced back, but upon gaining the line of hills to the east of the Granny White Pike, made a determined stand, repulsing repeated charges of the Union troops. At two P. M., a grand charge was made, to the music of "Rally round the Flag," played by all the bands, before which the enemy was finally driven. Still he clung to every favorable position, as he went back, and fought determinedly. The final charge, just at the close of the day, was made by the Seventh Division, led by General Knipe, which swept the enemy from his position. The regiment lost in this series of battles, two killed, and a number wounded.

The enemy was now in full retreat, and on the morning of the 17th, the cavalry started in pursuit. At a point a mile beyond Brentwood, on the Franklin Pike, his cavalry was found in line of battle across the road. The Nineteenth was ordered by General Knipe to charge with the sabre. Without waiting to form line, the command dashed forward in columns of fours, and scarcely had the rebels delivered a single volley, when it was upon them. Unable to withstand the impetuosity of the onset, the rebel line broke, and for two miles, and until it reached the infantry column at Hollow Tree Gap, it was closely pressed. Here the enemy's infantry and artillery was concealed from view, and before its position was known, the regiment was charging upon it.

Suddenly saluted by canister at short range, and by showers of bullets, and being unsupported, it was unable to stand, and fell back upon the rest of the brigade. As the brigade came up, the fight was renewed, and the enemy was routed. At Franklin he again showed a determined front. In the engagement which ensued, the Nineteenth charged upon him, in position behind a stone wall, but was repulsed; moving around upon the flank of his position, and supports coming up, he was driven to a second line. Here he was again attacked, and the battle raged until nine at night, when he was driven at all points. In this day's fighting, the regiment took three stands of colors, and three hundred and fifty prisoners. Its loss in killed, wounded, and missing, was about twenty-five. Major Holahan, Captains Frank Reeder, and N. M. Smith, and Acting Adjutant James Blackstone, were among the wounded.

The enemy made good his escape across Duck River, destroying the bridges after him, in consequence of which, the Union column was delayed until the pontoon train could be brought up. On the 23d, a crossing was effected, and the pursuit renewed. On the 25th the advance came up with his rear-guard at Anthony's Hill, from which he was driven after a spirited engagement, in which the Nineteenth re-captured some of its own men. At Sugar Creek he again made a stand, and was found in good position behind a line of works. The Nineteenth was held in reserve at the ford, while a part of the command crossed and attacked. The attack was repulsed, and the force was driven back across the stream, when the Nineteenth advanced to its relief. For thirty minutes the regiment held its position, in face of vastly superior numbers, but was at length driven back, his forces crossing the stream above and below, and completely outflanking it. Finally, the Nineteenth was dismounted, and sent, together with Myers' Ohio Battery, to attack upon his rear, while the concentrated Union force moved upon his front, when he was routed and driven. The regiment lost during this engagement, twelve in killed and wounded. This virtually ended the campaign.

On the 4th of February, 1865, while in camp at Gravelly Springs, Alabama, the regiment, which had become greatly reduced in numbers, was consolidated into a battalion of six companies, and supernumerary officers were mustered out. On the 8th, the battalion embarked at Eastport, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Reeder, for New Orleans, and after a brief detention at Cairo and at Vicksburg, arrived at its destination, on the 9th of March. On the 20th, it moved to Baton Rouge, where, engaged in picket and scouting duty, it remained until near the middle of August. On the 13th of June, the battalion was further consolidated to four companies. On the 25th of July, it met and defeated a detachment of General Wirt Adams' command, at Clinton. On the 12th of August, the battalion moved to Alexandria, Louisiana, where headquarters were established, and where company B remained. Company A was sent to Shreveport, C to Monroe, and D to Natchitoches. On the 15th of December, company A was sent to Marshall, Texas, and C to Jefferson, in the same State. In January, 1866, company A had a sharp fight with guerrillas, defeating them with heavy loss. The company lost five killed. In March, companies B and D were ordered to New Orleans, where A and C joined them in April. Here they performed provost duty until the 14th of May, when they were mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FIRST, TWENTIETH CAVALRY.

THIS regiment was recruited in the months of June and July, 1863, in compliance with an order of the War Department, of the 9th of the former month. It was composed of seven companies, recruited for six months' service, and five companies of emergency militia, and was principally from the counties of Bucks, Montgomery, Chester, Dauphin, Cumberland, Union, and from the city of Philadelphia. Previous to its organization, and while the rebel army was making its triumphal march in the State, the several companies—acting independently—were employed in scout and picket duty along the fords of the Susquehanna, in the vicinity of Harrisburg, and on the various roads leading towards Carlisle, York, and Marysville. The regiment was organized in July, with the following field officers: John E. Wynkoop, Colonel; William Botch Wister, Lieutenant Colonel; Samuel W. Comly, Major. On the 7th of July, the regiment left camp Couch, near Harrisburg, where it had rendezvoused and had been drilled, and marched up the Cumberland Valley to Greencastle, whence it was sent upon scout duty into Maryland, and in conjunction with three companies of the First New York Cavalry, followed upon the footsteps of Lee's army to Hagerstown, near which place, a portion of the command, under Captain Singiser, engaged the rebel rear-guard, capturing a few prisoners and horses. From Greencastle, the regiment marched to Falling Waters, where it bivouacked, and picketed the shores of the Potomac, then much swollen by recent rains. The roads were in a horrible condition, and for nearly three weeks it was kept upon the march, the trains being moved with the greatest difficulty. At the end of this time, it went into camp near Clear Spring, Maryland. Early in August, and after the emergency companies had returned to Harrisburg, and their places had been partially supplied by six months' men, the regiment was ordered to Sir John's Run, West Virginia, to guard a portion of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and to cover the country in the direction of Winchester. Accordingly, companies F and I, under Major Comly, were stationed at Berkeley Springs, D and E, under Major Thorp, at Bloomery Gap, A and H, at Great Cacapon Station, and C at Hancock. The remaining five companies were on detached service, under Major Douglass, at Philadelphia, Reading, and Pottsville, and did not re-join the rest of the regiment until the final muster-out. About a hundred dismounted men remained at headquarters.

The command at Berkeley Springs was attacked, in the early part of September, by a body of the enemy's cavalry, who penetrated the picket lines by a mountain defile. After a sharp struggle, they were driven, with a loss to the regiment of twenty taken prisoners. A number of horses and some camp equipage were also lost. Major Comly, with the company at Hancock, pursued the party for twenty miles, but failed to overtake it. Soon after this, the companies were all concentrated at headquarters, whence scouting parties were sent out, by night and by day, which frequently met roving bands of the enemy, and were fired upon by parties lying in wait for them in concealment, but failed to encounter any organized forces. In November, the regiment was brigaded with the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania, Fifteenth Virginia, First Pennsylvania Battalion, and the Third Virginia Artillery, which it joined at Springfield. The weather soon after became intensely cold, and the enemy was wily and active, requiring ceaseless vigilance, and subjecting the troops to great hardship and suffering. From Springfield, two companies were sent on a reconnoissance to the south of Romney. They proceeded nearly a hundred miles into the heart of the State, engaged the enemy—a part of Imboden's command—defeated him, captured and destroyed a piece of artillery, and a number of small arms, and took several prisoners. They also burned the Columbian Furnace, then operated by the rebel authorities for the manufacture of war material. They returned to Springfield, after an absence of four days, without having sustained any loss. On the 24th of December, the regiment was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 7th of January, 1864, its term of service having expired, it was mustered out.

Previous to its disbandment, measures were taken for its re-organization for three years' service, and during the month of February, the men were mustered into service, in camps at Harrisburg and Philadelphia, and the following field officers were commissioned. John E. Wynkoop, Colonel; Gabriel Middleton, Lieutenant Colonel; J. Harry Thorp, Robert W. Douglass, and W. W. Anderson, Majors. Upon taking the field, it reported to General Sigel, who was in command of the army in the Shenandoah Valley. On the 15th of May, Sigel encountered a superior force of the enemy under Breckenridge, at New Market, and after a severe battle, in which he lost some prisoners and guns, was forced to retire to Strasburg. The Twentieth sustained a loss of three in this engagement. Sigel was soon after succeeded by Hunter, who at once opened an active campaign, advancing in the direction of Lynchburg, encountering obstinate opposition on the way. The cavalry was kept actively employed in this advance, the Twentieth sustaining a loss of three at Staunton, on the 10th of June; and of two at New Glasgow, on the 14th; and losing in the various encounters almost daily. Hunter arrived in front of Lynchburg on the 17th, and during the two succeeding days, the fighting was severe, the regiment being actively engaged, and losing heavily in killed and wounded. Hunter was obliged to retire, after having made a vigorous assault, without success, and retreated into the Kanawha Valley, whence he proceeded by transport with his army to Parkersburg, and thence by rail to Martinsburg. The Twentieth shared the hardships of this retreat, and in an action at Salem, on the 21st, sustained a loss of four.

General Crook succeeded General Hunter in command of the army, which was subsequently known as the Eighth Corps, and on the 18th of July, met the forces of Early and Breckenridge, at Snicker's Gap, in the Blue Ridge, and defeated them, taking three hundred wagons. In this engagement the regiment actively participated, and sustained a loss of fourteen. It was engaged on the 24th, at Winchester, making a daring charge down the Winchester Pike, in which Captain John C. Henry was mortally wounded. A few days later the regiment was sent, by order of General Crook, to attack the rear of General Early's forces, by way of Ashby's Gap, and in the engagement which ensued, it sustained a loss of one hundred and eight in killed, wounded, and missing. In the meantime, the command in the valley had been reinforced by the Sixth and Nineteenth corps, and two divisions of cavalry, and on the 7th of August, General Sheridan was placed in command of the combined forces. In the re-organization of the cavalry, which soon after took place, the Twentieth was assigned to the Second Brigade, of the First Division, General Devin in command. A month later, Sheridan inaugurated an active offensive campaign, in which a series of brilliant victories were gained, and the power of the enemy in the valley was completely annihilated, the subsistence of any considerable hostile force being rendered impossible. So complete was this destruction, that it was humorously declared, "If a crow wants to fly down the valley, he must carry his provisions with him." In this campaign the Twentieth participated, and at its conclusion, went into winter-quarters with the brigade, where it was engaged in severe guard and scout duty, and in occasional expeditions in force against bands of the enemy's cavalry, which still maintained a bold and defiant attitude. Upon the retirement of Colonel Wynkoop, Lieutenant Colonel Middleton was promoted to succeed him.

On the 27th of February, 1865, Sheridan, who had remained during the winter in the valley, opened the spring campaign by a grand cavalry raid. With a force of ten thousand horse, he led in the direction of Lynchburg. At Waynesboro, he again encountered Early, whom he routed after a spirited engagement, and striking the James River Canal, and the Virginia Central Railroad, effected immense destruction, and moving in by White House, on the 27th of March, just one month from the time of starting, reported to Grant in front of Petersburg.

Grant was now upon the point of moving upon the rebel position with all his forces, and Sheridan was immediately put in motion with the cavalry towards Dinwiddie Court House. The enemy's advanced lines were pressed back behind his intrenchments, and a part of the cavalry was sent out towards Five Forks. But the enemy who had been reinforced, struck heavily the Union infantry which had come into position on his front, and pushed the cavalry back towards Dinwiddie, Sheridan dismounting his men, and disputing the ground stubbornly. General Grant, in his report, says of Sheridan's action: "Here General Sheridan displayed great generalship. Instead of retreating with his whole command on the main army, to tell the story of superior forces encountered, he deployed his cavalry on foot, leaving only mounted men enough to take charge of the horses. This compelled the enemy to deploy over a vast extent of woods and broken country, and made his progress slow." In the meantime, Devin's command, in which was the Twentieth, had been temporarily separated from the rest of the corps, but again effecting a junction, it united in the attack which was made on the morning of the 1st of April, by which the enemy was driven by impetuous charges from one line of works after another, until he finally took shelter behind his main fortifications, on the White Oak Road. "The courage displayed," says General Sheridan, "by the cavalry officers and men, was superb." When the enemy had been thus driven to cover, the cavalry was ordered to make a feint to turn his right flank, while the Fifth Corps was brought into position for a powerful assault upon his left. The opening of the infantry fire was to be the signal for the cavalry to attack in earnest. "As stated before," says General Sheridan, "the firing of the Fifth Corps was the signal for General Merritt to assault, which was promptly responded to, and the works of the enemy were soon carried at several points by our brave cavalymen. The enemy were driven from their strong line of works and completely routed, the Fifth Corps doubling up their left flank in confusion, and the cavalry of General Merritt dashing on to the White Oak Road, capturing their artillery and turning it upon them, and riding into their broken ranks so demoralized them, that they made no serious stand after their line was carried, but took to flight in disorder. Between five and six thousand prisoners fell into our hands, and the fugitives were driven westward, and were pursued until long after dark, by Merritt's and McKennie's cavalry, for a distance of six miles." "I cannot speak too highly," says Sheridan further on in his report, "of the conduct of the troops in this battle, and of the gallantry of their commanding officers, who appeared to realize that the success of the campaign and the fate of Lee's army depended upon it." In the heroic conduct by which this brilliant result was secured, the Twentieth, led by Colonel Middleton, shared, and won by its steadiness and resolution, the commendation which was thus freely given; but not without serious loss. Lieutenant Henry Lebo was killed, and Lieutenant Albert S. Ely was mortally wounded, and a large number of killed and wounded in addition, shows the fiery ordeal through which it passed. Until the final surrender, which took place on the 9th, the regiment was kept constantly in motion and in action, and sustained losses almost daily. At the close of the campaign, it returned to the neighborhood of Washington, where, on the 17th of June, it was consolidated with the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry, under the name of the First Provisional Cavalry. It remained in service scarcely a month longer, and was finally mustered out on the 13th of July, at Cloud's Mills, Virginia.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SECOND, TWENTY-FIRST CAVALRY.

THE Twenty-first Cavalry was recruited during the months of July and August, 1863, by authority of Governor Curtin, under the President's call of June 15th, for cavalry for six months' service. Company A was recruited in York county, B in Adams, C, and G in Lancaster, D, H, I, K, L, and M in Franklin, E in Bedford, and F in Cambria. The companies were equipped and mounted at Camp Couch, near Harrisburg, and were thence sent to camp of instruction near Chambersburg. The following field officers were selected and commissioned: William H. Boyd, Colonel; Richard F. Moson, Lieutenant Colonel; Charles F. Gillies, Oliver B. Knowles, and John W. Jones, Majors. The field officers were all experienced in cavalry duty. Colonel Boyd had commanded a company in the Lincoln Cavalry, which had attained distinction upon the Peninsula, and especially in skirmishing with the advance of Lee's army, in the Cumberland Valley, in the Gettysburg campaign. Lieutenant Colonel Moson had commanded a company in the Seventh Cavalry. Major Gillies was a regular army officer, and Major Knowles had served with great gallantry under Captain Boyd, in the Lincoln Cavalry. Most of the line officers and men had previously been in the service. On the 23d of August, the regiment was ordered to Harrisburg, whence a detachment, consisting of companies C, E, K, H, L, and M, was sent for duty to Pottsville and Scranton, and company B to Gettysburg. The remaining five companies, under command of Colonel Boyd, proceeded to Harper's Ferry, and during the fall and winter, were engaged in arduous duty in the Department of the Shenandoah.

In January, 1864, authority was given to re-organize the regiment for three years' service, and about the 1st of February, its scattered ranks were concentrated at camp near Chambersburg, where the troops who did not choose to re-enlist were mustered out of service, the remainder were mustered for the long term, and its depleted ranks were filled by new recruits. The field officers all remained, with the exception of Major Jones, whose place was filled by the promotion of Captain Robert Bell. On the 1st of April, company D was ordered to duty at Scranton, Pennsylvania, where it remained for over a year. About the middle of May, the regiment was ordered to Washington, where, upon its arrival, it was dismounted, armed and equipped as infantry, and sent by transport to join the Army of the Potomac. It arrived at the front on the 1st of June, and was assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, of the Fifth Corps, where it was associated with the Sixty-second Pennsylvania, and Twenty-second and Twenty-third Massachusetts, commanded by Colonel Sweitzer. The army was then in front of Cold Harbor, and at noon of the 2d, the regiment was sent to the left of the Fifth Corps, where it was ordered to throw up breast-works. These were hardly completed, before the enemy opened upon it a flank fire from his artillery, from which Lieutenant Richard Waters was instantly killed. On the following morning, it was ordered a half mile to the right, to the support of a battery, and at seven, the enemy brought his twenty-four pounders into play, killing two men and three horses belonging to the battery. The regiment was subsequently ordered to the front line, and in reaching it, was obliged to pass over a grain-field which was raked by the enemy's infantry and artillery fire. The charge across this was gallantly made, but with a loss of eight killed and nineteen wounded. A galling fire was kept up during the entire day from behind breast-works, and, notwithstanding it had this protection, it suffered considerable additional loss, the entire number being eleven killed and forty-six wounded. Colonel Boyd received a severe wound, on account of which he was subsequently discharged. Captain William H. Phillips, and Lieutenant Martin P. Doyle, were also among the wounded. On the 18th of June, it was again engaged in front of Petersburg. "We were marched" says J. D. H., who has published a pamphlet of the "Travels and Doings" of the regiment, "over the field where the Second Corps had been engaged the day before, and the ground was covered with their dead. We came to a halt in a woods, where we were ordered to lie down. The rebels then commenced to shell us. We lost a great many men, killed and wounded. Among the latter was Major Gillies, of the First Battalion, wounded in the knee. We were ordered to go forward, and charged across a large field, and came to the Petersburg and Suffolk Railroad. Here we halted and kept up a brisk fire with the rebels, who were behind their works in front of us about half a mile. In the evening we were ordered to charge a large rebel fort. We fixed bayonets, and went up the hill on a yell, while the rebels opened upon us a perfect hail-storm of iron and lead from their muskets, and from sixteen pieces of artillery. If Cold Harbor was hard, the fight of the 18th of June was harder. We charged the brow of the second hill, and the rebel fort lay directly in front of us, at a distance of about one hundred and fifty yards. Here we found that we could go no farther. He who went beyond this, went to his grave. Four times were our colors shot down, and four times were they raised again. Finding that we could do no more, we halted and formed, and while some carried rails and built works, others kept up a heavy fire on the fort, which effectually silenced their artillery. After forming a line of works, we lay behind them, keeping up a fire with the rebels until morning, when we were relieved and taken to the rear." In this engagement, the loss was eleven killed, seventy-nine wounded, and one missing. Lieutenant Colonel Moson, and Lieutenant Henry G. Lott, were among the severely wounded, the latter mortally. Major Gillies was incapacitated for further service, and was honorably discharged, and Lieutenant Colonel Moson was prevented from re-joining his command until near the time of its muster-out. The command of the regiment consequently devolved on Major Knowles.

On the 22d, the regiment was again engaged on the Jerusalem Plank Road, losing two killed and three wounded. Early in July, the Sixty-second Regiment was mustered out of service, by reason of expiration of its term, and the Ninety-first was assigned to the brigade, to the command of which Colonel E. M. Gregory succeeded. The regiment remained for some time in heavy works, near the Ninth Corps line, where it was subjected to a vigorous shelling. On the 30th of July, upon the occasion of the springing of the Mine, it was under fire, and sustained some loss, Captain John H. Harmony being wounded, but no advantage was gained, and the routine of duty behind the works was resumed. On the 18th of August, a descent was made upon the Weldon Railroad, in which the Twenty-first participated, and was engaged in destroying the track, when the enemy attacked; but by the timely arrival of a portion of the Ninth Corps, he was repulsed, and the portion of the road possessed was held. The loss was one killed and twenty-seven wounded. Among the latter was Lieutenant James Spear Orr, mortally.

Early in September, the Twenty-first was brigaded with the One Hundred and Eighty-seventh, Major Knowles commanding. About the middle of the month, upon the withdrawal of the One Hundred and Eighty-seventh from the front, the Twenty-first was transferred to the First Brigade, General Sickel in command, where it was associated with the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth. On the 30th, the brigade joined in the movement to the left, and at Poplar Spring Church came upon the enemy's works, which were triumphantly carried, with a loss in the Twenty-first of sixteen killed and wounded. On the following day, the regiment was attacked while lying upon the ground, in a large open field, but held its position without serious loss. For its gallantry in this engagement, it received a complimentary order from General Griffin, in command of the division. With this battle closed the connection of the regiment with the infantry.

On the 5th of October, the Twenty-first was sent to City Point, where it was equipped and mounted, and ordered to the division of General D. M'M. Gregg, in which it was assigned to the First Brigade, composed of the First Maine, Sixth and Thirteenth Ohio, Second New York, and Twenty-first Pennsylvania, commanded by Colonel C. H. Smith. On the 27th of October, the regiment was in a sharp engagement at the Boydton Plank Road, where the division went to the support of the Second Corps, which was hard pressed. The fighting was severe, and the Union forces were obliged to retire, the cavalry holding the line until the infantry and artillery were well out of the way, and then cutting its way out after night-fall. The Twenty-first lost three killed, thirty-three wounded, and eighteen missing. Captains Elias M'Mellen, and George F. Cooke, and Lieutenants Martin P. Doyle, Henry C. Pearson, John T. Pfoutz, and Henry B. Kendig, were among the wounded, and Lieutenant William Chandler, among the prisoners. On the 1st of December, the division proceeded to Stony Creek Station, destroying the station and rebel stores. The regiment was of the rear-guard on the return march, and sustained some loss. On the 4th, company E was detailed for duty at the headquarters of the Sixth Corps, with which it remained until near the close of its service. On the 6th the regiment was again out upon the Bellefield raid, and on the 10th was engaged, losing two killed, five wounded, and one, Lieutenant John A. Devers, a prisoner. In the meantime, Major Knowles was promoted to Colonel, and Captain Richard Ryckman to Major.

On the 5th of February, 1865, a heavy force of the Union army moved across Hatcher's Run, for the purpose of opening the way to the left, and extending the lines towards the South Side Railroad. It was met by the enemy, and heavy fighting ensued, but the Union forces held their ground. Gregg's Cavalry co-operated, and moved on to Dinwiddie Court House, meeting some opposition, but having no serious fighting. Colonel Knowles had command of the brigade in this expedition. During the winter, the Twenty-first was recruited to the full maximum strength, and on the 1st of March, was transferred to the Second Brigade, of the Second Division, which was composed of the Second, Fourth, Eighth, Sixteenth and Twenty-first Pennsylvania regiments, commanded by General J. Irvin Gregg. The dismounted men of the Twenty-first, comprising nearly half its entire strength, were ordered to City Point, under command of Captain James Mickley, and with the dismounted men of the brigade, participated, under command of Major Oldham, of the Eighth Pennsylvania, in the final assault upon the defenses of Petersburg.

"On the 29th of March," says Major Bell, "the cavalry corps moved out on the left flank of the army, the Eighth Pennsylvania having the advance. By some mistake, this regiment mistook the road, which left the Twenty-first in advance, and gave it the honor of making the first charge in the campaign, striking the rebels near Dinwiddie Court House, carrying their barricades, and capturing some prisoners, from whom important information, pertaining to the rebel cavalry under Fitz Hugh Lee, was obtained. The Twenty-first was not in the fight of the 31st, which well nigh proved a disaster, it having been detailed to hold a bridge over Stony Creek. When it was discovered that the cavalry line was unable to hold its ground, Colonel Forsythe, of Sheridan's staff, ordered the Twenty-first to throw up a line of works across the road, in rear of the Court House, and said, with emphasis, 'This must be held, at all hazards, until morning, when the Fifth Corps will be up.' Fortunately, the rebels did not follow their advantage, and the regiment was undisturbed during the night. The Second Brigade was only partially engaged at Five Forks, it being posted to prevent any flanking attacks on the left. On the 5th of April, the Second Division struck the rebel wagon train, and captured a battery, destroying two hundred wagons, and bringing in some nine hundred mules. The First Brigade made the captures, while the Second and Third did the most of the fighting. Out of two hundred and thirty-four engaged, the Twenty-first lost ninety-eight in killed, wounded, and missing, in less than half an hour. Adjutant Samuel Henry had two horses shot under him. On the next day, the Twenty-first was in the fight at Sailor's Creek, capturing a number of prisoners, with the loss of Lieutenant J. Henry Trice, killed, and a few men wounded. On the 7th, the brigade had a sharp, and in a measure disastrous fight, at Farmville, in which General Gregg was captured, and the regiment sustained some loss, mostly prisoners. At daylight on the 9th, our brigade, under Colonel Young, of the Fourth, was thrown across the main road to Lynchburg, upon which the rebel army was retreating, and had some sharp work, contesting the ground in front, while Rosser's Cavalry hung upon its rear. Finally, the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth corps came up, and the division turned upon Rosser, who was driven nearly a mile, when he made a determined stand, and preparations were made to charge him in force. The Third Brigade had the centre, and the Twenty-first led on the main Lynchburg Road. At the sound of the bugle, the regiment dashed forward, driving in the rebel skirmish line; but by the time his main force was reached, it was discovered that the regiment was entirely unsupported, and fearfully exposed to capture. A precipitate retreat was made, in which some prisoners were lost. On its way back, it was greeted with the glad tidings that Lee had surrendered, the other brigades having received the intelligence just as the Twenty-first went forward."

From Appomattox Court House, the brigade marched back to Burkesville, and shortly after to Petersburg. It had been but a few days in camp, when Sheridan moved with his entire cavalry corps for North Carolina. Upon his arrival at the Dan River, learning that General Johnston had surrendered, he turned back, and retired again to Petersburg. Early in May, the brigade was sent to Lynchburg, whence detachments were sent for provost duty to various points in the surrounding counties. Colonel Knowles, with a part of the Twenty-first, was sent to Danville, Virginia. About the middle of June, the entire regiment, including detached companies and dismounted men, was concentrated at Lynchburg, and on the 8th of July, was mustered out of service. The active duty of the regiment really commenced on the 1st of June, 1864, at Cold Harbor, and virtually ended on the 9th of April, at Appomattox Court House, a period of a little over ten months. In that time it had three field officers severely wounded, one staff officer slightly wounded, one died of disease, and one was discharged to accept promotion in the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Regiment. Of the line officers, four were killed in battle or mortally wounded, ten were wounded, four were wounded previous to their promotions, and four were captured. Of the enlisted men, one hundred and forty-seven were killed in battle, or died of disease, and two hundred and fifty-three were wounded.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was organized at Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Union League Association, and was known as the Fourth Union League Regiment. Recruiting was commenced in the fall of 1863, the troops rendezvousing at a camp near Frankford Depot, subsequently on Broad Street, below Chestnut, but the organization was not completed until the March following, when the following field officers were appointed: George P. M'Lean, Colonel; William Powell, Lieutenant Colonel; John Reynolds, Major. Colonel M'Lean had served as Major of the Twenty-second, and Colonel of the Eighty-eighth regiments. The regiment contained a large proportion of very young men, who, in the earlier stages of the war, would not have been passed. Immediately after its organization, it proceeded to the front, and joined the Army of the Potomac, in camp upon the Rapidan, where it was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, of the Second Corps, and was associated with the Sixty-first New York, Eighty-first Pennsylvania, and Twenty-sixth Michigan, under command of Colonel Nelson A. Miles.

In the fierce fighting of the Wilderness, on the 5th and 6th of May, it was at the front, and again on the 8th, at Laurel Hill, where the rebel columns were encountered, and in the struggle which ensued, it lost four killed. At the Po River, the fighting was renewed, and here the brigade resisted the fierce charges of the enemy, and repeatedly repulsed his bold assaults. Its loss was two killed. At a little before dawn, on the morning of the 12th, Hancock assaulted the right of the rebel line, carrying his works, and taking many captives, guns, and small arms. Miles' Brigade had a prominent place in this assault, and shared the glories of the victory. The One Hundred and Eighty-third lost in this engagement, ten killed and five mortally wounded. Captain John H. Hutt, and Lieutenant John M. Ottinger, were among the killed. Soon after this battle, Colonel M'Lean, Lieutenant Colonel Powell, Major Reynolds, and Adjutant Theodore F. Mann, resigned, on account of some differences existing between themselves and Colonel Miles, in command of the brigade, and the line officers having had little experience in military duty, Captain John F. McCullough, a veteran officer of the One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, was appointed Colonel, and Captain George T. Egbert, Major. In the action at Tolopotomy Creek, on the 31st, Colonel McCullough, who had shown himself a brave and gallant man in the fierce fighting which preceded it at the North Anna, was killed, and the regiment lost besides, in these battles, twelve killed. On the 3d of June, the fighting was renewed at Cold Harbor, and here the struggle became more desperate and destructive than on any previous field, the regiment losing eight killed, and five mortally wounded. Captain Joseph R. Smith was among the killed. On the 15th of June, Captain James C. Lynch, of the One Hundred and Sixth Pennsylvania, at that time acting as Inspector General of the division, was assigned to the command of the regiment, and was commissioned Colonel.

After crossing the James, the regiment participated in the attack made by the corps in front of Petersburg, on the afternoon of June 16th, in which the enemy was driven from his outer line. On the morning of the 17th, a charge was made by a portion of the Ninth Corps, which resulted in the capture of some prisoners, and seven guns. At evening, a charge was again made by a part of the same corps, which was repulsed, and the troops fell back upon the First Division of the Second Corps, which held the enemy in check. For several days the division was engaged in advancing and changing its lines, which involved frequent and heavy skirmishing. On the 22d, it was advanced some distance in front of its works, when the enemy came very suddenly in upon its left flank, compelling it to fall back rapidly to the line from which it had moved, with the loss to the regiment of a number wounded and taken prisoners. Early in August, the term of service of the Seventy-second Regiment expired, and upon its muster-out, the veterans and recruits were assigned to the One Hundred and Eighty-third. Its numbers were thereby raised to a standard which entitled it to a full complement of field officers, whereupon, Major Egbert was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain Augustine T. Lynch, to Major. The regiment was now thoroughly re-organized and drilled, but remained otherwise inactive until the 26th of July. On that day it was put upon the march, and with the corps crossed the James, approaching the enemy's lines near Deep Bottom. The skirmishers of the brigade were immediately advanced, and discovered the enemy in position behind breast-works, along the margin of a wood, with an open field in front. Across this the brigade was ordered to charge. Forming under cover, it moved with such celerity across the open space, that little time was given the enemy to make a defense, and before he was hardly aware of its presence on his front, the brigade was upon him, capturing his works, and four pieces of rifled cannon. Colonel Lynch led the regiment in this charge, gallantly riding at its head, and having his horse shot under him. It lost four killed. On the 29th, the corps returned to the support of the Ninth Corps, but on the 12th of August, again crossed the James, and in the battle which ensued, the regiment suffered a loss of three killed, but was only partially engaged, the corps returning to the works before Petersburg, without gaining any signal advantage.

With little delay, the corps moved upon the Weldon Railroad, and on the afternoon of the 25th, the enemy attacked, and finally drove the division, after being repeatedly repulsed. The regiment lost one killed, and a number in wounded and prisoners. A few days after this battle, the One Hundred and Eighty-third, now numbering about one hundred and fifty men, was detailed for duty at Cedar Road Station, guarding the railroad leading from City Point, where, for a time, it was out of the range of the enemy's guns. Towards the close of September, it was relieved by the Twenty-sixth Michigan, and moving up to the line of works, was posted along the right bank of the Appomattox River, on the extreme right of the line, facing the enemy on the opposite bank. Colonel Lynch here had command of the brigade, which held nearly three miles of the line, and Lieutenant Colonel Egbert of the regiment. There was little firing upon its front at this time, but on account of the marshy and malarial nature of the ground along the valley, the duty proved destructive to health, chills and fever prevailing, which sent large numbers to the hospitals. On the 6th of October, Colonel Lynch was mustered out, his term of service having expired, and Lieutenant Colonel George T. Egbert was subsequently commissioned Colonel, Major Augustine T. Lynch, Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain Horace P. Egbert, Major. At the opening of November, the brigade was relieved by the 12th New Jersey, and re-joined the division. On the 9th of December, at Hatcher's Run, the brigade came upon a line of the enemy occupying temporary works. He had filled the stream with felled timber, to impede the passage to his position. The Second New York Heavy Artillery, supported by the brigade, crossed and drove him out. He afterwards returned to the attack, and opened a brisk fire, but was prevented from crossing the stream. At the conclusion of this skirmish, the regiment returned to camp, and remained undisturbed until the 5th of February, 1865, when the lines were extended to the left, and works were built in the new position, which works it occupied.

Early on the morning of the 25th of March, the enemy surprised and captured Fort Steadman, on the Ninth Corps front; but the troops soon rallying, re-took it, killing, wounding, and capturing most of the attacking party. An order was immediately issued for the advance of the pickets along the whole Union line. The pickets of the Second Corps at once opened a rapid fire, and the brigade moved early to the support of those upon its front. During the day the picket line was advanced, with but little opposition, until half-past four in the afternoon. The enemy then came out in force, drove back the pickets, and came upon the supports, when a brisk action, lasting for half an hour, occurred, in which the position of the brigade was held, and the enemy was forced to withdraw, after suffering severe loss. The One Hundred and Eighty-third had one killed and thirteen wounded. The regiment was soon after transferred to the Fourth Brigade, with which, on the 29th, it commenced moving and skirmishing, and on the evening of the 30th, was under fire of the enemy's shells, near the Boydton Plank Road. On the following morning, in company with the One Hundred and Forty-fifth, the regiment was ordered back nearly a mile, and was brought into position upon a road leading from Dabney's Mills to the Boydton Road. While engaged, the rest of the division charged and captured a part of the enemy's line, taking prisoners and two battle flags. During the night of April 1st, the command marched to the support of the Fifth Corps, returning in the morning, and on Sunday the 2d, while moving forward, came upon the enemy's rear-guard, well entrenched, and disposed to dispute further progress. Charges of the Second and Third brigades failed to dislodge him, whereupon, the Fourth Brigade moved to the left, and coming in upon his right flank, drove him in utter rout. In front of the One Hundred and Eighty-third, little opposition was met, the line advancing in excellent order. Until the surrender of Lee, on the 9th, the regiment was kept upon the march, but had little more severe fighting. After the surrender, it marched back through Richmond, to Alexandria, participated in the grand review of the armies at the Capital, on the 23d of May, and on the 13th of July, was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

SEVEN companies of this regiment, recruited in various and widely separated sections of the Commonwealth, for a term of three years, rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where, in May, 1864, they were organized, and on the 14th of that month, moved under command of Major Charles Kleckner, to join the Army of the Potomac, coming up with it as it was crossing the Pamunky River, on the 28th of May. It was immediately assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Second Corps; and on the day following its arrival, was led to battle at Tolopotomy Creek. It was engaged in skirmishing on the way to Cold Harbor, and on the second day of the battle, led the brigade in two desperate assaults upon the enemy's works, losing sixty-seven killed, and one hundred and thirteen wounded, and leaving some of its dead on the enemy's intrenchments. Lieutenants William D. Williams, and S. Hamilton Norman, were mortally, and Leonard F. Brahm, severely wounded. For its unflinching bravery, it was warmly commended by its brigade commander. For ten days it remained upon the front line, heavy skirmishing being constantly kept up. It then moved with the corps, and crossing the James, assaulted the enemy's works on the 16th, repeating the assault on the two following days, and losing in each very heavily. On the 22d the assault was renewed, and the brigade, after having charged and gained a position close upon the fortifications, was out-flanked, and a large number were taken prisoners. In this engagement, the regiment lost fifty-two in killed and wounded, and one hundred and fifteen taken prisoners. Captains Evans, Haines, Huff, and McKeage, and Lieutenants Rahn, Stover, Bryan, and Adjutant Muffly, were among the prisoners. Out of five hundred men who stood in the ranks on the banks of the Tolopotomy, on the 29th of May, three hundred and fifty, including twelve officers, had been either killed, wounded, or taken prisoners, in a period of twenty-five days—a loss unprecedented. Of the number taken prisoners on the 22d, sixty-seven died at Andersonville, and a number at Salisbury and Florence. The greater part of the wounded prisoners died at Petersburg.

Near the close of July, the handful which remained, joined in an expedition to Deep Bottom, where it was engaged in skirmishing for a day, returning on the 29th. On the 16th of August, the command again crossed the James, and in the neighborhood of Deep Bottom, after skirmishing during the entire forenoon, made a determined assault, in which it lost, out of ninety-seven engaged, twenty-seven in killed and wounded. Returning to the Petersburg front, the corps, with but little delay, moved out upon the Weldon Railroad, and commenced its destruction. On the afternoon of the 25th, the enemy attacked with terrible earnestness, but was three times repulsed, with fearful slaughter. In a fourth assault, which he delivered with fresh troops, and in overpowering numbers, the little brigade was overborne, and compelled to fall back. Lieutenant Colonel Kleckner, in command, while at the head of his regiment, cheering on his men, was severely wounded. On the same night, the fragment that remained marched back to Petersburg, and was placed in the trenches, where it was employed in fatigue duty, until near the close of October. In the meantime, three new companies, recruited for one year's service, were added to the regiment, completing its full number. On the 25th of October, the regiment marched with the corps to Hatcher's Run, where, on the 27th, it was hotly engaged, the corps being outflanked and roughly handled. The regiment lost fifteen in killed and wounded. After the battle, it returned and was placed in the trenches between forts Haskell and Steadman. It was here subjected to constant duty, in close proximity to the enemy's lines, where it lost a number in killed and wounded, from the unerring fire of his sharpshooters, Captain Joseph S. Jenkins being instantly killed.

In December, the regiment moved to the left flank of the army, and here it was joined on the 1st of January, 1865, by Colonel John H. Stover, who had been commissioned at its organization, and now assumed command. Colonel Stover had previously served as Captain in the Tenth, and Major of the One Hundred and Sixth. On the 5th of February, he led his command to Hatcher's Run, where, on that and on the following day, it was warmly engaged. It encamped on the field, and remained there during the winter, the lines being extended to that point. On the 28th of March it broke camp, and on the 1st of April, took position in line of battle in front of the enemy. On the 2d, in common with nearly the entire army, it moved to the assault, breaking the enemy's lines, and capturing his works with but small loss. It then moved with the corps in pursuit, and skirmished as it went, until it reached Appomattox Court House, where the rebel army surrendered. It then marched back to the neighborhood of Washington, and participated in the grand review of the armies. On the 2d of June, the three companies last added to the command, were mustered out, and the remaining seven, which formed the original regiment, on the 14th of July.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FIFTH, TWENTY-SECOND CAVALRY.

THE Twenty-second Cavalry was formed by the consolidation of a battalion known as the Ringgold Cavalry, with a battalion re-organized from a force of five companies, which had been called out for a period of six months, upon the occasion of the rebel advance into Pennsylvania, in the summer of 1863. Two companies of the Ringgold Cavalry, A and G, of the new regiment, were recruited in the summer of 1861, in Washington county; four other companies, B, C, E and F, also from Washington county, in the summer of 1862; and one company, D, from the same county, in the spring of 1863. These companies had gone into service, as fast as recruited, in West Virginia, and had acted independently, those first entering, taking part in the battle of Rich Mountain, in July, 1861, in which the rebels, under command of General Lee, were defeated and driven with severe losses, and in October, at Greenbrier and Romney. On the 7th of January, 1862, these companies were engaged at Blue's Gap, east of Romney, where the enemy was defeated with a loss of fifteen killed, two pieces of artillery, wagons, tents, and twenty prisoners; on the 14th of February, at Bloomery Gap; on the 19th of March, at Strasburg; on the 22d, at Winchester, in which General Shields defeated the rebel General Stonewall Jackson, inflicting severe loss; on the 15th of April, at Columbia Furnace; on the 17th and 18th, at Two Churches, and at Rood's Hill; on the 15th of August, at North River Mills, and at Dashu's Mills on the 9th of November. During the winter and spring of 1863, they were actively employed in guard and scout duty, in which they rendered most efficient service. When the rebel army advanced in force into Pennsylvania, towards the close of June, many of the Union troops in West Virginia were summoned to the assistance of the Army of the Potomac, in expelling the invader, and these companies hastened forward, arriving near Williamsport, on the 8th of July, where they met some forces of the enemy, and on the following day, at Fairview. The rebel army escaped on the night of the 14th, but was closely followed, and on the 17th the cavalry came up with him at Martinsburg, and skirmished with his rear-guard at White Hall, on the 22d. The spring campaign of 1864, in West Virginia, opened early, and on the 3d of January, the enemy was met at Petersburg, where the battalion was engaged, and in the beginning of February, at Lexington and Moorefield.

The Six Months' Battalion, which formed the nucleus of the new regiment, was recruited in June, 1863, and was employed under command of Major Morrow, in guarding the fords of the Susquehanna, above and below Harrisburg, and in picketing the roads leading into the Cumberland Valley. After the defeat of the rebel army at Gettysburg, it was pushed up the valley in pursuit, and until the close of its term of service, was engaged with the cavalry in holding the Shenandoah Valley. Upon its muster-out in February, 1864, in compliance with an order from the War Department, the battalion was re-organized at a camp of rendezvous near Chambersburg, and was recruited for a term of three years. On the 22d, the Ringgold Battalion was united with these re-organized companies, and a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: Jacob Higgins, Colonel; A. J. Greenfield, Lieutenant Colonel; George T. Work, Elias S. Troxell, and Henry A. Myers, Majors.

On the 1st of March, the battalion at Chambersburg, under command of Major Troxell, proceeded to Martinsburg, where it joined the forces of General Sigel, and proceeded thence, by his order, to Cumberland, where the Ringgold Battalion was stationed, and where a union of the two was effected. The regiment remained in camp of instruction here, until April, when that portion of it not mounted, amounting to about seven hundred men, proceeded, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Greenfield, to a general camp of rendezvous for cavalry, in Pleasant Valley, Maryland, where it received horses and equipments, and where it remained until the middle of May, the men receiving, in the meantime, a thorough course of drill and discipline. From Pleasant Valley it moved to Camp Stoneman, near Washington, where its instruction was continued. About the middle of June, it was ordered to Martinsburg, where, upon its arrival, it was temporarily armed with muskets, and under command of Major Troxell, was assigned to the infantry brigade, commanded by Colonel Mulligan, who soon after led his forces to Lees town, to meet the threatened advance of the rebel General Early. On the morning of the 3d of July, the brigade was furiously attacked by a largely superior force. With the most determined bravery, Mulligan's little band stood its ground, and for eight hours held the enemy at bay, keeping open the way of retreat for Sigel, at Martinsburg, and thereby assuring the safety of the army and its material. The detachment, though fighting as infantry, in which it was little schooled, showed such spirit and determination, that Colonel Mulligan placed it at the fore front, where it repelled repeated assaults of the enemy. On the 6th and 7th it was engaged in a series of skirmishes on Maryland Heights, and for some days afterwards was on the march with the troops, then retiring before a superior force of the enemy under Early, advancing towards Maryland, with the design of effecting the capture of the National Capital. On the 15th it again crossed the Potomac, and moved through Loudon county to Snicker's Gap, having, on the 17th, a sharp engagement at Snicker's Ferry. It then advanced to Winchester, but on the 22d, was ordered back to the camp at Pleasant Valley, for the purpose of being mounted and thoroughly equipped as cavalry. On the 8th of August it left camp, and joining the force of General Torbert, led the advance of General Sheridan, who had just then been put in command of the entire army in the Shenandoah Valley. On the 9th, it came up with and joined in the attack of the rebel rear-guard, capturing ten men and fifteen horses. On the 20th, under command of Colonel Lowell, it covered the retreat of General Sheridan from Cedar Creek. On the 21st, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Greenfield, it took part in an engagement at Kernstown, where it displayed great steadiness and gallantry, repelling repeated assaults of a largely superior force. On the three following days it was warmly engaged at Opequan and Berryville, and on the 25th at Charlestown, sustaining considerable loss, Captain Thomas D. French and Lieutenant F. B. Smith, being among the wounded. On the 26th, under a severe artillery fire, it participated in an attack upon the enemy's position, charging his lines, and capturing a number of prisoners. Major Myers was severely wounded in this engagement. Soon afterwards the detachment was ordered to Hagerstown, where it was united with the detachment which had been left at Cumberland, in the April preceding. The latter, at this time under command of Major Work, had been in constant and active service during the entire summer, taking part in the campaign of General Hunter against Lynchburg, and serving in the brigade commanded by Colonel Higgins, under Sigel and Crook, with whom it was actively engaged in the battles of New Market, and Kernstown, on the 25th of July. It subsequently joined the division of General Averell, and with him made a forced march in pursuit of McCansland, after the burning of Chambersburg, coming up with him at Moorefield, where a decisive battle was fought, and the rebel leader was put to rout, losing many men, and all his guns. In this engagement, Major Work was sent with his command to flank the enemy and attack his rear, which was accomplished with the most gratifying success. After the union of the two commands at Hagerstown, the entire regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Greenfield, advanced under General Averell to Martinsburg. On the 31st of August the division was attacked, and after a severe engagement, was driven towards Falling Waters. On the 2d of September it again advanced to Darkesville, and boldly attacked, capturing the enemy's wagon train. On the 3d, at Bunker Hill, and on the 4th, at Stephenson's Depot, it was engaged with largely superior forces of infantry and cavalry, and on the 7th, charged the enemy at Darkesville, driving him in confusion. On the 12th, it was again engaged in an action at Bunker Hill, and on the 15th, in one at Bucklestown, in each of which the regiment bore itself gallantly.

Sheridan was now ready to move upon Early with all his forces, and on the 18th, the regiment charged the enemy at Martinsburg, checking him in the town, and early on the following morning, pursued his retreating forces towards Winchester. Captain John H. Boring, and Lieutenant Felix Boyle, were wounded in this engagement. On this day, Sheridan attacked at the Opequan, and at evening, the Twenty-second, led by Major Troxell, joined in the cavalry charge which finally routed the rebel army, and sent him in flight and confusion through Winchester, the regiment capturing a battery and eighty men. Captain William F. Speer was among the wounded. Following the retreating enemy, it came up with him at Fisher's Hill, where it participated in the fierce fighting which again routed the enemy, Lieutenant George Gass being wounded, and on the 26th, pushed the advantage by attacking at Mount Vernon Forge. On the 27th, the division was surprised while in camp, by a superior force of the enemy. The Twenty-second rallied, under a severe fire, and delivered a most determined charge, driving the enemy back in disorder, and held the ground in face of an overwhelming force, thereby saving the entire division train. Its loss was very severe. Major Work, and Adjutant Joseph G. Isenberg, were among the severely wounded, and Lieutenant C. L. Mercereau, and Surgeon S. M. Finley were taken prisoners. The regiment was commended here by Major Troxell, Lieutenant Colonel Greenfield being in command of the brigade, the latter displaying both courage and ability in the disposition of his troops. At Cedar Creek, on the 19th of October, it was again fiercely engaged, losing a number in killed and wounded, Captain Martin Kuhn being of the latter.

A few days after the battle, the regiment was sent in charge of a train bearing the wounded to Martinsburg, where, after its arrival, it went into camp, and remained until the 20th of December. It was then ordered to New Creek, and during the winter, was engaged in active duty in the the counties of Hardy, Hampshire, and Pendleton, operating against roving bands of the enemy, which infested the mountains of that region, capturing and driving them away, and completely freeing the country from their presence. To accomplish this, the command was kept almost constantly in the saddle, and was exposed to great hardships and privations, in moving over mountain roads covered with ice and snow and swept by wintry blasts.

In April, 1865, nearly one-half of the men were mustered out of service, their term having expired. The remainder, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Greenfield, continued in service until near the close of June, when it was consolidated with a portion of the Eighteenth Regiment, forming the Third Provisional Cavalry. The new command was distributed at various points through West Virginia, and contributed largely to the restoration and maintenance of civil order. It was finally mustered out of service at Cumberland, Maryland, on the 31st of October.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited in the city of Philadelphia, from the 29th of January, to the 31st of May, 1864, for three years, and was organized with Henry A. Frink, as Colonel. Colonel Frink had served as Major and Lieutenant Colonel of the Eleventh Regiment, and upon taking command, was appointed Provost Marshal of the city of Philadelphia, his regiment being assigned to provost duty. In the discharge of this duty, it remained until the 15th of August, 1865, when it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

A body of troops known as the First Battalion, which had been organized just previous to the invasion of the State, in July, 1863, for six months' service, and which had performed guard and provost duty at various points in the State, was, upon the expiration of its term, re-organized and recruited as a part of this regiment. Four new companies were added to it, and the regimental organization was completed in March, 1864, at Camp Curtin, with the following field officers: Joseph F. Ramsey, Lieutenant Colonel, and George W. Merrick, Major. While here, it performed camp and provost duty, and was regularly drilled. Soon after its organization, it was assigned, by companies, to duty at military posts in the State. On the 18th of May, an order was received from the War Department for the various detachments to assemble at Harrisburg, preparatory to joining the Army of the Potomac. Leaving Harrisburg on the 19th, it proceeded to Washington, and went into camp at Arlington Heights, where its equipment, which had been defective, was made complete. On the 26th it started for the front, proceeding by transport to Port Royal, and thence marched by Bowling Green, capturing two of the enemy's scouts on the way, pausing at the Mataponi to build a bridge, and reaching the battle-beaten ranks of the army during the progress of the fierce fighting at Cold Harbor. It was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, of the Fifth Corps, commanded respectively by General J. L. Chamberlain, General Charles Griffin, and General G. K. Warren.

For a few days subsequent to the battle of Cold Harbor, the regiment was engaged in picketing and entrenching, and in the various changes of position of the corps. At two A. M., on the morning of the 7th, the corps moved to the extreme left of the army, and threw up intrenchments on the north bank of the Chickahominy, the enemy keeping up a continuous fire upon it as it passed. For several days the corps remained in position, covering the army in its passage of the Peninsula. On the 16th it crossed the James, and made a forced march to the position which the army had taken up before Petersburg, arriving at midnight, and during the fighting of the 17th, supported the Ninth Corps. Heavy firing was kept up during the night, the troops sleeping upon their arms. On the morning of the 18th, the corps moved by the left flank, the enemy shelling it as it went, and crossing the Petersburg and Norfolk Railroad fell with impetuosity upon the enemy's right, while the Second Corps engaged him in front, and drove him back with heavy loss to his inner works, compelling him to abandon the line of railway. The lines were then re-formed, the enemy at the same time opening a galling fire, and at three P. M., the Second and Fifth corps moved to the assault of his last line. His pickets in front of the Fifth were driven, and pressed to a ravine not more than fifty yards from his works, when he opened a murderous artillery fire on the front and left flank of the corps, compelling it to fall back with heavy loss. The One Hundred and Eighty-seventh, led by Major George W. Merrick, lost in the engagement more than a tenth of its numbers in killed and wounded, holding its place in the most gallant manner, and winning, by its good conduct, the special commendation of General Chamberlain, who, himself, received a dangerous wound. Major Merrick, and Lieutenant Jonathan J. Jessup, each lost a leg while leading their men in the charge. At five in the evening, the enemy made a desperate counter-charge, but was repulsed with great slaughter. The work of intrenching was immediately commenced, and pushed until the 20th, when the corps moved to a position on the Jerusalem Plank Road, to the right of the Second Corps, where it was again set to intrenching, and day and night the work was pushed, a hot picket and artillery fire being constantly kept up between the two lines. On the 4th of July, a salute of two hundred guns was fired from the Union side, which was answered in full chorus by the enemy, the bands on both sides playing patriotic airs. On the 9th, in response to orders to strengthen the lines, several strong forts were commenced. The largest of these, standing on a commanding ground, was made to mount sixteen guns, and was christened Fort Sedgwick, but has since been popularly known as Fort Hell.

Early on the morning of the 18th of August, the Fifth Corps moved south upon the Jerusalem Road, about five miles, when, facing westward, it moved in the direction of the Weldon Railroad. After advancing half a mile, the skirmishers struck the enemy's out-posts, when the Union line of battle moved up to their support, and Griffin's Division advanced to the railroad, striking it at Yellow House. In the meantime, the remaining three divisions were drawn up in line for its protection, and just as they had commenced the work of throwing up breast-works, the enemy, under A. P. Hill, who had come out from Petersburg, arrived in the front, and at once attacked. For some time the battle raged furiously on both sides, each sustaining heavy losses. Finally, Griffin's Corps was withdrawn from its destruction of the railroad, and placed in support of the corps line, when a charge was delivered by the entire force, driving the enemy back. He, however, rallied, and made a counter-charge, but suffered a disastrous defeat. All night long intrenching was vigorously pushed, the pickets keeping up a sharp fire. The battle was renewed in the morning, and raged furiously until noon, when the enemy, having suffered severely, withdrew to his works. On the 20th, the position of the corps was changed, and its ground strongly fortified. The One Hundred and Eighty-Seventh was actively employed upon this work, until the 22d of September, when it was ordered from the front, and proceeded for duty to Philadelphia. Lieutenant Colonel Ramsey had retired from the service in the previous August, and Major Merrick having been disabled by his wounds from further field service, the line officers joined in a petition to the Governor of the Commonwealth for the appointment of Captain John E. Parsons, who was then serving as Assistant Adjutant General of the brigade, to the command. He was accordingly commissioned. Upon its arrival in the city, it was placed in Camp Cadwalader, and was employed in garrison and escort duty. Opportunity was here given for thorough drill, which was studiously practiced. At the funeral obsequies of President Lincoln, it was assigned to the head of the procession, on its way from the Baltimore Depot to Independence Hall, and was left as guard of honor while the remains lay in state. With the First City Troop, it was detailed to escort the remains from Independence Hall to the New York Depot, as they were borne away. On the 11th of May, it was detached by companies for guard and provost duty in various parts of the State. Early in August, the war being now over, the companies rendezvoused at Harrisburg, where, on the 3d, the command was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

THE Third Artillery, One Hundred and Fifty-second of the line, was organized for garrison duty at Fortress Monroe. Numerous recruits were sent to it from time to time, after entering the service, and as it sustained few losses, its ranks were not only kept full, but a large number of unassigned men accumulated. The number of surplus men had become so great by the first of April, 1864, that an order was issued from the War Department, directing a call to be made for volunteers from this regiment, to form a new infantry regiment. In response to the call, over six hundred men volunteered, and in less than two weeks, a new regiment, afterwards known as the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth, was organized, with nearly nine hundred men. The following field officers were appointed, promoted from captains of companies in the Third: George K. Bowen, Lieutenant Colonel; Francis H. Reichard, Major. A large proportion of the men had served in other organizations before entering the Third, over three hundred having been in the Reserve Corps. The organization, arming, and equipping of the new regiment had scarcely been completed, when it was ordered to the field. On the morning of April 25th, it took up the line of march from Camp Hamilton, a mile and a half from the Fortress, where the organization had been made, for Yorktown. Upon its arrival, it was assigned to the Third Brigade, First Division, of the Eighteenth Corps, where it was associated with the Second Connecticut, Fourth New Hampshire, and Fifty-eighth Pennsylvania regiments.

On the 4th of May, the Eighteenth Corps moved by transports to Bermuda Hundred, above City Point, on the James. Skirmishing commenced soon after the debarkation, which continued for a full week before the advance reached Fort Darling, at Drury's Bluff, a strong work upon a commanding position. At Proctor's Creek, on the 10th, the command was warmly engaged, losing two killed, and on the 13th and 14th, again sustained some loss. Major Reichard, who was in command of the skirmish line of the brigade, had succeeded in driving the enemy out of a small redoubt, within eight hundred yards of the fort, and had posted some of his men behind some log huts, where they picked off the enemy's gunners. During Sunday, comparative quiet prevailed, the men busying themselves in throwing up breast-works. On the morning of Monday the 16th, the enemy having massed his forces and prepared them for action, under cover of a dense fog, which hung like an impenetrable curtain on every hand, made an unexpected and most determined assault. The firing was of necessity much at random, but the struggle was maintained with unflinching valor, and positions were taken and re-taken at the point of the bayonet. The enemy bore heavily upon the right of the line, and Heckman's Brigade, which held this ground, was driven in. The Third Brigade was moved to its support, and in the midst of the movement, the right wing of the regiment, consisting of six companies, under command of Colonel Bowen, by order of Captain Reed, of General Brooks' staff, was separated from the left, and took position to the right, and considerably in advance of the rest of the brigade. Soon after taking position, Captain Reed rode forward and informed Colonel Bowen that the position was an important one, and must be held to the last extremity. Other aids came, and finally General Brooks himself, to encourage the men, and to magnify the importance of the position. Finally, Captain Reed called for volunteers to go forward a few hundred yards to bring off a Union battery which had been abandoned. The battalion responded in a body, and soon had possession of the battery, but found it so disabled, that they were unable to remove it. Discovering this movement, the enemy opened a heavy and a most murderous fire upon the command, compelling it to fall back to its first position. By this fire, Captain Hiram B. Shinkle was mortally wounded, and fell into the enemy's hands, dying while a prisoner at Richmond. As the command executed this retrograde movement, the portion of the Union line, which was posted in its rear, unfortunately mistook it for a charge of the enemy, and opened fire upon it, delivering two volleys before the mistake was discovered. The division was finally driven back, and took position behind its works at Bermuda Hundred. The loss in this unfortunate engagement, was eleven killed and sixty wounded. The command was immediately put to fortifying, and for a period of two weeks, it was kept busy in strengthening and improving the works.

Near the close of May, the Eighteenth Corps, under command of General Baldy Smith, was ordered to reinforce the army of the Potomac, and on the evening of the 1st of June, came up to the Sixth Corps near Cold Harbor, taking position on its right. Scarcely had the newly arrived forces got into position, when the word to advance was quietly passed along the lines, and a simultaneous and most desperate charge, by the entire Union force in position, was made on the enemy's strong lines of well abatised earth-works and forts. These proved to be well manned, and the storm of deadly missiles which was poured upon the advancing troops, caused them to recoil. Three times the lines were rallied, and returned to the attack, when, just as darkness was setting in, the enemy's outer line of works was carried, and though exposed until far into the night to a desperate artillery fire, was held and fortified, every spade, pick, tin cup, plate, even to the hauds of the men, being brought into requisition. At a little before dawn, on the morning of the 3d, the troops were again formed, and two desperate charges were made, but all with no avail. Their ranks were swept with terrible effect, and they were compelled to desist, after having displayed unparalleled daring and courage, and left the ground strewn with their dead and wounded, many of them lying close up under the enemy's guns. Falling back to their lines, they fell to fortifying and strengthening their works, and for a period of ten days, artillery was plied with little cessation, but without material effect. In the two brief struggles on the 1st and 3d, the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth lost twenty-four killed, and a large number wounded. Among the killed were Captain Herman C. Moeller, and Lieutenants William Dieterlie, Ernest Schmidt, and Adam W. Mattice, and among the mortally wounded was Captain Harry E. Breel.

When further efforts to carry the enemy's works by assault were deemed fruitless, the Union forces moved out of their trenches, and crossing the Peninsula and James River, came on the 16th upon the enemy in front of Petersburg. He was soon driven from a strong line of fortifications, extending along a bluff which stretches away some miles to the south and east of the city. After several days of severe fighting, a line was established some distance in advance of the bluff, where strong lines of intrenchments and covered ways were built. The Eighteenth Corps was posted on the extreme right of the line, its right resting on the Appomattox, and fronting the rebel work known as Fort Clifton. The rebel guns at the fort, and the guns of batteries placed on the opposite side of the river, were so posted as to easily command the position occupied by the regiment, which would have been untenable, had it not been in a measure protected by the Union guns. In this position the regiment remained nearly two months, and during that time, lost eighty in killed and wounded, and a much larger number by disease. Lieutenants Charles Stark, and George B. Sherbon, were among the killed. The latter had just been promoted, but had not been mustered, when, by a sharp-shooter's bullet, he was cut down.

On the 5th of July, company F, which, since the 16th of May had been on detached service at Drury's Bluff, re-joined the regiment with full ranks, materially adding to its strength. On the 27th of August, the Eighteenth Corps was relieved by the Tenth Corps, the Eighteenth proceeding to occupy a position on the Bermuda Front, which the Tenth had vacated. On entering the works, the troops were saluted with a fierce fire from the enemy's guns; but this was soon silenced, and they remained in comparative quiet and security to near the close of September. On the night of the 28th, the entire corps was relieved, and moving silently, crossed the James on a muffled pontoon bridge, at Aiken's Landing, and just at day-break, commenced a cautious advance upon the enemy. His pickets were soon encountered and driven, and pushing on at quick time, through a thick wood with tangled undergrowth, the troops at length emerged upon open ground in front of the rebel works, but a few hundred yards away. Fort Harrison, strongly built and bristling with cannon, was in their immediate front, and before the garrison was hardly aroused, the order to charge at double-quick was given. A long stretch of open ground was passed at a run, and though the enemy brought all his guns and his small arms to bear, he failed to get the range of the advancing troops, firing for the most part too high. At a point within fifty yards of the fort was a slight ravine, which stretched along in its front, capable of affording some protection, and here the line was re-formed, and the men took breath. They were now under a desperate fire, and to go forward was sure to entail heavy slaughter; but pausing only for a moment, the word was again given to charge, and without flinching, as one man the line sprang forward. A terrible volley swept it, and many brave men fell. For an instant it seemed to waver; but only for an instant, and recovering, it dashed on, and the works were carried. Fortunately, the men of the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth were well schooled in the use of the Fortress guns, and instantly turned the guns of the fort upon the foe. The victory was complete. The rebel stronghold, with all its guns, small arms, and many prisoners, was taken. General Ord, in command of the corps, and General Stannard, in command of the division, were wounded, and General Burnham was killed. The First Division was soon rallied, and advanced upon Fort Gilmer, to the left, under cover of rebel gunboats on the James, and batteries posted along its banks; but it was repulsed, and suffered grievous slaughter in returning to the fort, Lieutenant George McNeil receiving a mortal wound when close upon the rebel works. At night-fall, the troops were put to work in preparing the fort for effective defense, and at dawn it had been reversed and presented a new face. This labor was completed not a moment too soon, for during the night the rebels had been reinforced, and daylight showed them preparing for an assault. They were soon discovered in motion. On they came in solid column; but not a shot was fired from the fort until they had come within a few yards, when, just as they were commencing to utter that unearthly screech, so familiar to Union ears, the signal was given, and such a volley was poured into their ranks as caused them to recoil, and retire in utter confusion, leaving the ground covered with their dead, and their fallen colors. Re-forming, again they advanced, but again were they stricken, and sent staggering back. In desperation, their officers flew to the front, and a third time led them on; but all to no purpose. They fell like grain before the sickle of the reaper, and they were finally compelled to yield the ground, and give up the contest. Many of their men were swept in as prisoners, and twenty stands of colors taken.

Though foiled in their main purpose, they succeeded in throwing a body of sharpshooters upon the right of the Union line, in such a position as to enfilade the brigade line, which began to suffer severely, the traverses of the works having been only partially completed. Captain Henry B. Dickson, who had led the regiment in all this fierce fighting, a gallant officer, was instantly killed by the missile of a sharp-shooter, from this enfilading fire. The slaughter in the regiment was very great, the killed amounting to nearly sixty, and the wounded to upwards of a hundred. Lieutenant John Carson was also among the killed.

Not long afterwards, important changes were made in the strength and organization of the corps, and its designation was changed to that of the Twenty-fourth, the brigade to which the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth belonged, being changed to the Third, of the Third Division. Recruits, to the number of four hundred, were sent to the regiment while here. They had been recruited for the Third Artillery, but as that regiment was full, were sent to this. As the cold weather approached, the Brigade, which had been posted some distance to the rear of the fort, as a reserve, erected permanent winter-quarters, the various regiments vying with each other in the plan and finish of their soldier villages.

The monotony of camp life, which was little disturbed during the winter, was broken on the 4th of March, 1865. On that day the brigade moved, under Colonel Roberts, to Deep Bottom, and thence proceeded by transports, down the James and up the Rappahannock to Fredericksburg, landing at various points on the way, and effecting immense destruction of stores and property collected for the use of the rebel army. At Fredericksburg, a large quantity of tobacco, ready to be shipped to the rebel capital and depots of supplies, were committed to the flames. Upon its return, the brigade touched at Fortress Monroe, from which point it conveyed supplies to White House, destined for Sheridan, who was coming in from the Shenandoah Valley, having effected the destruction, on his way, of the James River Canal, and the railroads centring at Richmond.

Early on the morning of the 3d of April, there was an unusual stir in the camps about Fort Harrison, and rumors of strange movements of the enemy in front were circulating. The division, which was now commanded by Colonel Devens, was hastily formed, and, advancing, found the rebel lines deserted. A rapid march towards Richmond was commenced, and on coming in sight of the city, it was discovered to be on fire, and the wildest confusion prevailing, the explosion of shells and of whole magazines of ammunition, multiplying the terrors of the burning city. A part of the division was hurried away to assist in checking the flames, which were finally subdued, and comparative quiet was restored. The brigade was soon after settled in camp, in Manchester, a village on the opposite side of the James to Richmond. On the 28th of June, the members of the One Hundred and Ninety-ninth, whose term of service had not expired, were consolidated with those of the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth, with James O. Briscoe, of the former, as Colonel, and S. Irvin Given, of the latter, as Lieutenant Colonel, and the new regiment was ordered to Lynchburg. Soon after arriving there, Colonel Briscoe was promoted to Brigadier General, and placed in command of the post, leaving the regiment in command of Lieutenant Colonel Given, who retained it until the final muster out. Five of the companies were sent out into as many different counties surrounding the post, for guard and provost duty, and the remaining five were sent to Danville, where they were also distributed for similar duty. Thus separated, the companies served until the 14th of December, when they were ordered to assemble at City Point, where they were mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETIETH AND NINETY-FIRST REGIMENTS.*

UPON the muster out of service of the regiments composing the Reserve Corps, a large number of veterans and recruits, whose terms had not expired, still remained. These were collected and organized into two new regiments, known as the One Hundred and Ninetieth, and One Hundred and Ninety-first. The first of these was composed of men from the First, Seventh, Ninth, two companies of the Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Reserve regiments, to the command of which the following field officers were appointed: William R. Hartahorne, who had been Major of the Thirteenth, Colonel; Joseph B. Pattee, a Captain in the Tenth, Lieutenant Colonel; John A. Wolfe, a Captain in the Thirteenth, Major. The second was composed of men from the Second, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Tenth Reserve regiments, and had the following field officers: James Carle, a Captain in the Sixth, Colonel; George W. McCracken, a Captain in the Tenth, Lieutenant Colonel; Milton Weidler, a Lieutenant in the First, Major. Lieutenant Colonel McCracken was obliged to retire from the service, on account of wounds, soon after the organization, and was never mustered. The last battle in which the Reserve Corps participated, was that of Bethesda Church, on the 30th of May, 1864, and the new regiments were organized in the field immediately thereafter. They were at once pushed up to the front, and during the fierce fighting at Cold Harbor, were subjected to a severe artillery and musketry fire, answering with good effect. As soon as a lull in the fighting would permit, these regiments were organized, and constituted the Third Brigade, Third Division, of the Fifth Corps, Colonel Hartahorne, by reason of seniority, assuming command. He was soon after granted a furlough, and the command devolved on Colonel Carle. When the army commenced moving across the Peninsula, the Fifth Corps was thrown out towards Richmond, to cover the right flank of the advancing columns. These regiments were posted on the roads leading to Charles City, on the 13th of June, where they were attacked, and during the entire day, held at bay a superior force of the enemy. Colonel Pattee, in command of the One Hundred and Ninetieth, had his horse killed under him, and a number in both regiments were killed and wounded.

After crossing the James, the command moved rapidly towards Petersburg, arriving in front of the enemy on the 17th, and taking position after night-fall, in a slight ravine to the left of the position occupied by the Ninth Corps. A thin curtain of trees, on the bank in front, skirted a narrow open field, which sloped up to a sandy ridge, where was a body of timber, along the farther edge of which were the enemy's breast-works. The Ninth Corps had taken and were holding a portion of them. This brigade was ordered to drive out the enemy in its front, and hold the part connecting with that occupied by the Ninth Corps. Colonel Carle, accordingly, formed his line, and commenced cautiously to advance. It was hardly in motion before the enemy made an assault upon the troops of the Ninth Corps, driving them back; but coming upon this brigade, was checked, and in turn driven, some prisoners captured from the Ninth Corps being re-taken, and an entire rebel regiment, the Thirty-ninth North Carolina, was captured. On reaching the crest of the sandy ridge, the command dropped upon the ground, and while one-half kept up a vigorous fire, the other half began to scoop up the sand, and build breast-works. Though vigorously assailed by infantry and artillery, the ground was held, until regu-relieved. The loss was considerable. Lieutenant Robert G. Christnot, of the One Hundred and Ninetieth, was killed, and Lieutenant Colonel Pattee, in command of the same regiment, and Major Wolfe, who succeeded him, and Lieutenants Edward Greenfield and Daniel Blett, were severely wounded, the two latter mortally.

*The One Hundred and Eighty-ninth Regiment was organized from surplus men of the One Hundred and Twelfth, on the 18th of April, 1864, and participated in the Wilderness campaign, and in the operations before Petersburg, until the 5th of September, when what was left of it was returned to the old regiment from which it was taken. The records of the men will accordingly be found in the rolls of that regiment.

Until the morning of the 23d, the brigade was kept on active duty, losing daily in killed and wounded. It was then relieved, and after a day's rest, moved to the left, into pits vacated by the Second Corps. On the way to this position, the column was exposed to a sharp fire from the enemy's artillery and sharp-shooters, throwing it into some confusion, and occasioning some loss. During the 24th and 25th, sharp-shooting was incessant, after which a truce was entered into upon the picket line, which secured immunity from peril. At the opening of July, the brigade was ordered back, and commenced the construction of Fort Warren, and two weeks later to a position where was subsequently located Fort Crawford. On the 18th of August, the Fifth Corps moved upon the Weldon Railroad, capturing and destroying a portion, near the Yellow House. Colonel Hartshorne, who had just previously returned to duty, was in command of the brigade, which was early ordered upon the skirmish line. It continued to advance, over heavily timbered ground, driving back the enemy until it came in front of his breast-works, where a line was established and fortified. This advanced position was held, without supports, and with no connecting force on its flanks, until four o'clock on the afternoon of the 19th, when it suddenly found itself completely surrounded, and was forced to surrender. The captives were hurried away to rebel prisons at Richmond, Salisbury, and Danville, and were kept in confinement until near the time of Lee's surrender. Lieutenant Henry L. Stock was among the killed in the operations of the 19th. A small detachment had been ordered to the rear for provisions and ammunition, which escaped capture, and this, together with men returning from furlough, and from detached duty, was organized under command of Lieutenant Colonel Pattee, who soon after returned from an absence occasioned by his wounds, and was transferred to the Second Division, commanded by General Ayers, participating with that division in the remaining hostile operations of the year 1864.

On the morning of March 20th, 1865, Colonel Pattee with his own, and a battalion of the One Hundred and Fifty-seventh, moved with the corps across Hatcher's Run, and on the following day, passing Gravelly Run, advanced as skirmishers, and threw up rifle-pits. Towards evening the enemy attacked, but were easily repulsed by the rapid fire from the Spencer Repeating-rifles, with which the command was armed. On the morning of March 31st, the enemy, by a flank movement, drove a part of the corps back across Gravelly Run. Pattee's command was upon the skirmish line, and held its ground to the last, but was finally forced back, losing a number in prisoners. After re-crossing the run, the corps moved further to the left, and coming in upon the enemy's flank, re-gained the ground lost in the morning. During the night, it marched to the relief of Sheridan, at Five Forks, arriving within supporting distance at daylight on the morning of April 1st. Here the command was allowed some rest, of which it was sorely in need. At noon it was ordered forward, and came into line on the extreme left, resting on the rebel line of works. As usual, it was thrown upon the skirmish line, and bravely advancing, a hundred yards in front of the line of battle, led the way in that grand left wheel around the rebel rear, which crushed his entire force at one blow. When the last charge was made, the skirmishers awaited the coming up of the main Union line, when, joining in, they advanced with the column and shared in the glorious triumph, bearing away guns and small arms, and crowds of captive officers and men. From the 2d to the 9th, the pursuit was pushed, the skirmishers hanging upon the flank and rear of the rebel army. On the morning of the 9th, after having crossed the Lynchburg Railroad, Colonel Pattee was summoned to the front with his command, by General Ayers, and ordered to deploy to cover the front of his division, and push forward to the assistance of the cavalry. "At about noon on the 9th" says a member of the command, "we got the order, 'Bucktails to the front,' 'double quick,' 'march!' and away we went, past our own division, past the First Division, past the advance, out into an open space. 'Battalion into line,' 'deploy as skirmishers,' 'forward,' 'double quick,' 'march,' rang along the lines. The order seems to ring in my ears now. Away we went. Sheridan's cavalry was just coming out, as we went in. Soon we got sight of the rebels, and they of us. We advanced double quick, and they fell back double quicker. They opened on us with a battery from the brow of a hill, first with shells, and as we got closer, with canister, and just as we were about charging on the battery—up over the brow of the hill in front came a horseman, then another, and another. The first bore a white flag. 'Cease firing!' 'cease firing!' was the order, and the rider, bearing it, passed down through our line. 'They've surrendered,' 'they've surrendered,' was repeated from man to man, until the whole army knew the glad tidings, and cheer after cheer rent the air. The glad hour, for which we had been battling for four long years, had come." Returning after the surrender, to the neighborhood of Washington, the two regiments went into camp, where, on the 28th of June, they were mustered out of service.

NOTE.—The greater portion of the rank and file of these two regiments were captured before they had been three months in these organization, and consequently passed a much longer period in imprisonment, than in the field, not being released until the close of the war. It is but just, therefore, that some record should be made of the service of these brave men, while waiting, and starving, and dying in the miserable prison-pens where they were incarcerated; for they no less served their country, than those who stood at the front and faced the deadly missiles of the foe. From the 19th of August until the beginning of October, they were confined on Belle Island, near Richmond. They were then taken to Salisbury,

North Carolina, where they remained until death, or the advancing columns of Grant and Sherman compelled their release. Frank King, Sergeant Major of the One Hundred and Ninetieth Regiment, who was a prisoner through the entire term, and was among the last to be released, kept a record of his prison life, from which he has prepared a manuscript volume, of which I have been kindly permitted by the author to make the following extracts:

DESCRIPTION OF SALISBURY PRISON.—With the dawn of day, I was able to take a survey of the premises, which, as near as I can calculate, contained eight acres, and was surrounded by a tight board fence, eight feet high. The sentinels walked on elevated platforms outside the fence, but were not furnished with sentry-boxes like other prisons. The inside space was not square, being much wider on the north end than on the south. At the northern corners, spaces were left open in the fence, at each of which was a piece of artillery, as a defense in case of an uprising or rebellion among the prisoners. At the south end was a large gate, wide enough for the ingress or egress of wagons, which were loaded either with wood or water to come in, or dead "Yanks" to go out. On the west side was a small door, the same one by which our entrance was made, and through which all newcomers came. On the east, nothing but the bare fence, crowned with the rusty firelocks, and the no less rusty wearers of the "Butternut," was visible. So much for the boundaries—now for the internal arrangements. The small door on the western side, opened into what was termed the "grove," or "square," a large space, thinly sprinkled with big trees, (oak,) and surrounded on the four sides with buildings and fence. Starting from the fence, on the north was a brick building, unused, but afterwards turned into a little bakery, a space, and then a row of brick buildings, three in number, with about two rods intervening between each, the first being used as barracks for sergeants of squads, and the other two as hospitals. On the east side were three more brick buildings, the counterpart of the others; the first two being barracks, (afterwards hospitals,) and the last the "dead house." The south side was formed by a one-story wooden building, which was the main, or (as familiarly known,) No. 1, hospital; then a three-story brick building, which was a barrack for the citizen prisoners, the main factory building, tenanted principally by the Yankee deserters, and the big bakery, from which rations were issued. The fence formed the western side. In the centre of the grove was a covered well. There was a row of one-story wooden buildings, four in number, at the northern extremity of the enclosure, which were occupied by the commissioned officers captured from our army. They were divided from us by a "dead line," (a small trench,) and a line of guard posts. All communication between them and us was forbidden. There was a well near the big gate, one some distance in rear of the buildings east of the "square," and one behind the Citizens' building, which were in use at the time I arrived. Others were in course of construction, and were finished sometime afterwards. In the well behind the Citizens' building, the dead body of a negro had been thrown, previous to our coming, and we did not find it out until our frequent applications for water made the well almost dry, and thereby exposed the body to our gaze. It was taken up and carried off, but I had no relish for water from that well again.

UNION DESERTERS.—During the first few days, the "deserters" made a practice of roaming through camp among the new prisoners, taking a survey of us, with intent to plunder at a favorable opportunity. As we did not know these fellows ourselves, the officers would point them out to us, when we would drive them back to their quarters, amid a shower of blows from fists, stones, and clubs, or anything within our reach. The deserter had sometimes to run the gauntlet of the whole camp, and would reach his quarters, (in the main building,) bruised and bloody, and beaten almost to jelly. It is unnecessary to say, that we had not the least particle of sympathy for these wretches, who had deserted from the ranks of our regiments and gone over to the enemy, for purposes of plunder. The rebels did not appreciate their services any more than we, which was apparent from the fact of their sharing the same fare and treatment as other prisoners.

SUFFERING AT NIGHT.—The nights being extremely cold, although the days were warm, a small supply of wood was furnished us. Eight or ten loads were drawn in late in the afternoon of each day, and as they made their appearance, a great rush would take place among the prisoners. While some threw the sticks off, others of the same party carried them to their quarters, so that the stronger were sure of being supplied, while the weaker, or more timid ones, remained entirely destitute. To remedy this evil, a guard was sent in with each wagon, but the precaution was of no avail, for in a general rush, a single guard would be powerless. Another plan was then adopted, which gave to each squad a certain quantity of wood, and in that way all fared alike. The supply of wood was so small, that the quantity allowed was not sufficient to keep a fire going more than a few hours. When it was burned out, we would seek repose on the bare ground, with such covering as we were possessed of,

It was usual for a party of from four to a dozen to lie together, "spoon fashion;" that is, on our sides, all crooked one way. After remaining in one position long enough to get tired, one of the party would sing out: "by the right flank," or "by the left flank," when each man would roll over on his other side. When any one got too cold to lay longer, he would get relief by walking. I have walked for hours at a time many a night.

RATIONS.—A day's rations per man were a half loaf of bread, from two to four ounces of meat, and a pint of soup. For the bread ration, a pint of flour or corn meal, was sometimes substituted. When such was the case, we were obliged to prepare it ourselves, which, with our limited facilities, was no easy task. The methods of disposing of such rations were various, the most general in use being the making of a cake, baked on a tin plate before the fire, or in the coals. Some would make a kind of soup, using the flour for dumplings; others substituted a paste, and would go in on a meal of "gruel." The corn meal made a pretty fair mush, lacking only the milk. Scarcely anybody had salt, so the cooking had to be done without that luxury. For my part, I furnished myself with a small bag of salt, (four ounces when full,) and usually managed to keep a supply on hand. It was a very valuable bag, and was watched as jealously as a miser watches his hoard. For the meat ration, we sometimes received a spoonful of sorghum, and, very rarely, a few potatoes; (two or three ordinary sized ones per man.) The soup was sometimes thick with rice, but was generally served without the rice. The mode of issuing rations was as follows: When ready, squad No. 1 was supplied, then squad No. 2, and so on, until all were served—provided there was enough to go around. But if the supply to-day ran out at squad No. 25, to-morrow, squad No. 26 would commence, the rest following until squad No. 24 had been furnished, or the rations exhausted. If a squad, or a number of them, were deprived of rations one day, (and this was often the case,) it was never made up to them the day following; on the contrary, the food they should have had was so much gained by the Confederacy. It was such work as this that told so fearfully upon the constitutions of the men. A man can live a long time on a small ration, provided he gets that ration every day, regularly; but let that supply be cut off a day, or two days at a time, and pretty often, and it will begin to tell very quickly. I do not remember hearing of any one dying from starvation on Belle Isle; for there no rations were lost. I remember that once our squad was deprived of its ration of bread for sixty-four hours, and then only the usual amount was issued, viz: half a loaf per man. It was horrible, then, to see with what voracity the pittance was disposed of—or, rather, it would have been to a well-fed observer. The meat ration was often delayed altogether, for days at a time.

CITIZEN PRISONERS.—The first week or two at Salisbury, the citizen prisoners were kept pretty much confined to their building, a guard being stationed in front to prevent too much intercourse between them and us. At the end of the second week, however, the guard was taken off, and the citizens allowed to go and come as they pleased, within the limits of the pen. They were from all parts of the south, and were imprisoned chiefly for their disaffection to the Confederacy, or, in other words, for their loyalty to the laws and flag of their country. A few were incarcerated on the charge of being spies, and were awaiting either trial or sentence. A large number had already died from the privations they were made to suffer, and there were still many sick and dying. At Salisbury prison, in nine cases out of every ten, to be sick meant to die.

REFUSAL TO ALLOW HUTS TO BE BUILT.—The country around Salisbury was thickly wooded with young pines. Before the officers went away, they conferred with the Confederate authorities on the subject of letting the men build barracks for shelter, offering to become responsible for their good behavior when outside the prison limits, in case they were required to cut down the trees themselves, but to all this the prison officials returned a positive refusal. It was a fair offer, and would have saved the Confederate government a great deal of expense, besides being an act of humanity to the suffering thousands, who already began to feel the effects of exposure to the inclement weather; for, thus far, no shelter whatever had been provided. But no; it would have been contrary to the barbarous usage laid down in the rules of the Confederacy; a people who claimed to be throwing off the yoke of oppression, but who, while endeavoring to establish their independence on such grounds, were heaping untold oppression upon defenseless fellow creatures.

PLAN FOR AN ESCAPE.—Our trio had made a plan for an escape, and chose the coming night to carry it into execution. Our plan, which had been made two weeks before, was to burrow a hole in a secluded spot, under the fence, large enough for one to crawl through at a time, and then make for the Union lines in Tennessee, as fast as possible, living on sweet potatoes and orchard fruit. We laid in a small supply of red pepper, to use in case the blood-hounds were put on our track, by dropping a little in our foot-prints, it would be snuffed up by the dogs, and destroy their organs of scent, for a time at least. We had taken Sherman into our circle, who very readily availed himself of this chance to escape. By request of Sherman, we took Crudgingdon (both citizen prisoners) into our confidence, inasmuch as he was a native of Tennessee, and had escaped once on the same route we proposed to take; besides which, he had a tool for digging, which would be very useful to us. Our party having increased to five members, and everything being ready, all we waited for was a favorable night, which, as I have stated, came at last. At ten o'clock, Crudgingdon and Sherman were to come to our camp-fire, bringing the digging tool. We were then to adjourn to within a short distance of the fence, where the hole was to be made, and draw lots to determine which one should dig. We waited, shivering in the rain, over a small fire, until eleven o'clock, and no Sherman or Crudgingdon came; so I went to the Citizens' building, and called to Sherman. He came out, and I asked him if they were not ready yet. "Why, haven't you heard about it," said he. "No, what is it?" "Why Crudgingdon went out with the other party." And then it was that I found out that Crudgingdon and Sherman had joined with another party, who planned to burrow out in another spot, and that they had chosen the same night. About this time, Hebner obtained a woolen blanket, which was the joint property of Lord, Fleming, and himself. It was large enough, however, to cover four persons, and our trio had the privilege, in turn, of lying beneath it. By adding our pieces of tent cloth, five could make out to lie together with tolerable comfort; therefore, we managed that by one of us sleeping all night, and two of us half the night, we could each get a full night's rest, every third night.

CAVES FOR SHELTER.—A great many prisoners, for the want of better covering, or, in fact, for the want of covering at all, dug caves in the ground. A number of them were quite substantial, but the majority had a tendency to cave in. The manner of making a cave was to dig a square hole straight down into the earth, and, when sufficiently deep, to excavate horizontally a space large enough for the intended occupants to lie down in, the earth taken out being thrown on the top, to make the roof as high and as sloping as possible. The only implements available in the constructing of these dwellings were a case-knife and a tin cup or plate. As a further convenience it was customary to cut away the earth in one part of the inside large enough for a fire-place, and make a hole through the roof for a chimney. During heavy rains some of these caves would fill up with water, driving the tenants out into the storm. When the storm ceased, a course of bailing would ensue, or, in case too much damage had been done, another cave would have to be dug. I staid in one of these caves one night by invitation. Just before daybreak we were uncomfortably awakened by a portion of the roof caving in upon us. We scrambled out as fast as possible, and were fortunate enough to save our shoes, which we had taken off previous to lying down. It was lucky for us that the earth fell on our feet; had it covered our heads we might have been lying there to this day. I know of two cases in which the occupants of caves were buried alive. I have since never trusted myself underground, not even in a coal mine.

ORGANIZATION OF THE CAMP.—About the beginning of November a great change was made in the organization of the camp. We numbered altogether ten thousand prisoners. Although the mortality was very great we were all the time receiving reinforcements of new prisoners—"Fresh Fish," as we called them. Our entire force was now divided into ten divisions of one thousand each, numbered from one to ten, respectively. Each division was represented by one of its number, a Sergeant Major, usually, whose duty it was to see that his subordinates got their rations of food and wood in proper time, and also to assist the Confederate officer at the daily muster or roll-call of his individual division. The Division Sergeants had their quarters on the ground floor of the brick buildings devoted to the use of Sergeants, and had a double ration per day. Each division was again sub-divided into squads of ten, each squad being represented by a sergeant from its ranks, whose duty it was to draw rations and distribute them fairly to the members of his squad, and to report cases of death or absence at hospital. Sergeants were very remiss about reporting absentees, to the great annoyance of the prison authorities, who, in consequence, issued a great many more rations than there were prisoners. They tried many methods to overcome this evil, but they were unavailing; the "Yanks" were always too much for them. This non-reporting gave rise to the system, so familiar among Salisbury prisoners, known as "flanking," which was nothing more nor less than allowing one man to represent himself in two or more squads at one time.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISE.—As the season advanced a greater supply of wood was required for fuel. Inasmuch as the guard was doubled, the authorities could not muster the force required in the transportation of wood, so they organized from among the prisoners one hundred men, on double rations, as a "wood squad," whose business it was, under guards, to load wood on the cars a few miles from the prison and unload it at the terminus, a point on the railroad about five rods from the prison gates. They were taken out very early in the morning and returned in the evening of each day, when at work, which was three or four days out of the week. The members of this squad drove a flourishing trade for themselves out of the prisoners in camp and the citizens and soldiers outside. Buttons, needles, pins, thread, and such trinkets, were scarce, and it was extremely difficult for the country people to obtain them. They were willing to pay very handsomely for them, either in Confederate scrip, or in their own productions, such as pies, cakes, and tobacco. The rebel officers and guards were ever ready to purchase buttons from our uniforms, or even the uniforms themselves, and their readiness, and even anxiety to wear the "blue," was a subject of considerable remark among us, as it seemed to show a lurking spirit of animosity against the Confederate cause. However, U. S. buttons were at a premium, one coat button being worth one Confederate dollar. Therefore it was not strange that a member of the wood squad who could sell a button for a dollar, buy five plugs of tobacco with the money, and trade the tobacco in prison for five buttons, should be on the high road to fortune. I sold, or rather traded off all my buttons, four from my blouse and two smaller ones from my cap, at different periods, and when they were gone, the buckles off my suspenders.

BURIAL OF THE DEAD.—The squad already referred to as having made the ditch around the entire camp was not disbanded, even after that work had been completed. They were retained and kept at work digging trenches in which to bury the dead. The mortality was fearful, the deaths increasing daily from the first of October, when we went there, until about the middle of January, 1865, when they had reached about the number of fifty a day. Forty deaths in one day was a common occurrence, and one team and wagon was kept busily employed in carrying the bodies from the dead-house to the place of interment. During our first week at Salisbury coffins were furnished, which did seem to the living like one degree towards humanity; but, at the end of that time, we discovered that the same coffins, five in number, were used every day. When it was found out that we knew their secret, the practice was discontinued, and the bodies were carried out piled on the wagon like logs of wood. The upper portion of the dead-house was occupied by a few prisoners who preferred even that dismal abode to none at all. In case of a death the body was brought to the dead-house and laid out on the ground floor, stripped of all clothing but the under garments, and, in a few cases, even of them. When the prisoner died in his quarters his clothing was appropriated by his comrades; if at the hospital it was retained for distribution to the most needy.

STARVATION AND CONSEQUENT UPRISING.—During the month of November half rations were so frequent that it did seem as though the rebels intended to starve all of us to death. It got to be so serious a matter that some of the leading spirits resolved on a general outbreak. On the 25th of the month the guards were relieved by the militia of the State, principally old men and country farmers, a class of men that knew but little about the use of the musket. Intelligence reached us that the guard just relieved (young conscripts) had been ordered to the front. We hailed this as a good opportunity. It was resolved, therefore, that as soon as the inside guards were secured, that the ninth and tenth divisions, who lay nearest the big gates, should force them open with clubs and axes, a few of the latter articles being owned by the prisoners. The gates once forced, egress would be easy, and it would be short work to overpower the militia, most of whom, probably, had never fired a gun in their lives. When free from the prison we intended to make for Tennessee in as compact a body as possible. The plan was well laid, and all it wanted to ensure success was patience and cool judgment on the part of a few, and a general understanding of the situation by all. But, alas, for the success of so noble a cause. There was no want of courage and valor on the part of the prisoners, but the fool-hardiness and ill-timed action of the prime mover proved fatal to the enterprise. He, a Sergeant Major of Division, gave the signal a full hour and a half before the time agreed upon, and rashly, though bravely, commenced the assault with his own hands. "Who's for Liberty, and who for Death?" he cried, and immediately leveled a guard with a blow, and secured his musket. The entire guard inside the pen was overpowered within three minutes, and, with a tremendous cheer, a rush was made for the gates; but here the fool-hardiness was apparent, as the two divisions relied on for the main stroke did not know their part, and the enterprise was nipped in the bud. It was soon discovered, too, that the conscripts had not left the place, and the sentinel's platform fast filled up amid the discharge of grape and canister from the two pieces of artillery. Three-fourths, if not more of the prisoners, were unprepared for so sudden an assault, nevertheless, they rallied to the cheers of their comrades. But it was of no use; the rebels were fully armed and prepared at all points, many of our men were already killed or wounded, and still we were being fired upon; so we dispersed as quickly as possible, and in half an hour the camp was entirely quiet. I took refuge in a comrade's tent for about an hour, when I deemed it safe to return to my own quarters. On arriving there, I found that the tent had been in direct range of one of the guns, and that it was riddled with the charge of canister, having forty-two holes in the canvas. Fleming had been hit in the neck with a musket ball, and I learned that a rebel sergeant, with a file of soldiers, had been searching that and the neighboring tents for concealed arms. It seems that the authorities had an impression that we were fully armed and prepared for a pitched battle. They were never more mistaken; for it was only the feeble effort of a handful of men, made desperate by acts of inhuman barbarity. We had the satisfaction of knowing that we had pretty thoroughly frightened our brutal keepers. Major Gee, however, was reported to have said, in reply to the inquiry as to whether we were to have full rations the next day, "No, d—n them, they shall have only half rations, by G—d." I ought to mention that fifty of the prisoners were killed and wounded.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF A DAY.—The employment of a day might be described about as follows: The first thing on getting up was to draw rations, then breakfast of bread and crust coffee; after that, "skirmishing," &c. the operation of ridding our clothes of vermin, which were so plentiful that it was impossible to be rid of them; about noon we drew the soup ration, and the rest of the day did anything or nothing. In the evening we would squat around the fire, and to allow all to do so at once, each had to sit in a very cramped position. When thus engaged we were in the habit of speculating on our probable or improbable release, or what was much more common, of discussing the merits and demerits of the thousand and one kinds of edibles familiar to us in the "Auld Lang Syne." This was an inexhaustible topic, and our mouths would fairly water as the subject progressed. Kitty Snyder's favorite dish was a "blood pudding," and he always took great delight in explaining how it was made. From frequent hearing, I got to fancying that I should find myself perfect master of the art of cooking that most elegant dish, but, unfortunately, I have long since forgotten the number and kinds of ingredients necessary to produce so much luxury. Christmas eve was celebrated, in our tent, in telling stories and propounding conundrums to each other until a late hour.

REPAIR OF CLOTHING AND SHOES.—As may readily be supposed our clothes would not wear forever without mending. For coats, pants, and shirts, we managed to get along with what we had, until reinforced from the hospitals or by the deaths of our companions; but it was indispensable that we should keep the coverings of our feet in repair during the season of snow, frost and rain. In our tent was one needle, (a darning,) and a jack-knife, which were considered common property. For thread we depended on ravelings from my own piece of canvas, which kept decreasing in dimensions at an alarming rate. With needle, thread and pieces of old cloth, picked up in the camp, we managed to patch our socks effectually, though primitively. Our shoes were the worst, the soles having a sad tendency to depart from the uppers. By making an incision with the knife-point through upper and sole, at intervals around the shoe, and then tying with leather strings, cut from the top of the counter, a shoe was made to last a long time, though any amount of greasing would not have made it water-proof.

UNPROVOKED SHOOTING OF PRISONERS.—The guards were always ready to resent any trespass, of a prisoner, across the "dead line," by shooting him on the spot. But the shooting of prisoners was not confined to such offences. In October, 1864, whilst the officers were confined with us, one of their number was shot down, by a sentinel, without any cause or provocation, whatever, and he was some yards distant from the dead line. Later, a private soldier was shot dead while passing between the main building and the bakery. In February, I was an eye witness to the cruel and cold blooded murder of a prisoner, sitting in his tent, twenty or thirty yards from the dead-line, by a sentinel, who deliberately leveled his piece and fired as though merely practicing at a mark; having discharged his gun and seen the effect of his shot, he made use of those words, "You G—d d—n nigger, you." He was not removed from his post, though his conduct was well known to the officers of the guard.

About this time (18th of February) we had large reinforcements of prisoners, who were sent on from other prisons. That at Andersonville, Ga., had been broken up sometime previously, the inmates being sent to Florence, Columbia, or elsewhere. Sherman, in his "March to the Sea," was making rapid strides towards the rebel strongholds; hence their haste to empty their prisons.

RUMORS OF RELEASE.—A rumor was spread through camp that the sick were to be transported, in a few days, to Greensboro, and that the able-bodied were to proceed to the same place on foot, where transportation awaited all. Most of us gave but little heed to this report, for we had heard so many that we had grown into the habit of disbelieving everything, no matter how good the news; but, for once we were agreeably disappointed, for sure enough, on Sunday evening, a batch of the sick were taken out, and on Monday evening the balance of them removed. I, myself, assisted one helpless man from his hospital to the big gate, from which place the transportation was being conducted. Of all the misery, wretchedness, and horror, attendant upon the conveying of the many hundreds of sick from the prison gates to the Union lines, I will not venture to speak; that it was fearful and heart-rending I have not the slightest doubt. The greater part of patients were entirely helpless, large numbers died before our lines were reached, and the rest were in such a state of emaciation that it was a miracle that any life remained in their wasted forms.

GOOD-BYE TO SALISBURY.—But very little sleep was indulged in during the night of the 31st. On the following morning, the drums beat the "roll-call," the signal for all squads to form in line, which done, Confederate officers came into camp and required us to give a verbal parole of honor, to the effect, that we would make no effort to escape, etc., while en route to the Union lines; of course we were ready to subscribe to any conditions that would hasten our departure from a prison to a land of liberty. At eleven o'clock in the morning we were filed through the little gate and were mustered into one column, at a spot on the outskirts of the town. Washington's birthday was never better celebrated, than on this, the 22d of February, 1865, by the exodus of four thousand Union soldiers from the Salisbury penitentiary, in which they had undergone a five months' exposure to starvation, sickness, misery and wretchedness, the rains of autumn, the frost and snows of winter, and the merciless treatment of Major Gee and his barbarians.

REMARKS AND INCIDENTS.—Before closing this narrative, I wish briefly to refer to the condition of prisoners at Salisbury, together with a few incidents that transpired, and which I overlooked in the order in which they occurred: Imagine to yourself, dear reader, ten thousand men, captured in the summer months, and consequently clad in light garments, turned into a prison-pen, shelterless, robbed of blankets, and everything tending to the alleviation of our hardships, there exposed to cold, rain, frost and snow, starvation, bad water as a beverage, scarcely any at all for cleansing purposes, but very little medicine and care when sick, continually pestered with vermin, no employment and no amusement. Can it be any wonder that men, in such a condition, should contrast their lot with those taking their comforts and enjoying their liberties at the capital of the Nation?

SATISFACTION FROM A BONE.—I remember, early one day in November, when our rations were cut off, that some others and myself, for want of more substantial sustenance, burnt pieces of bones, eating the crisp, and repeating the operation until the bones were pretty nearly demolished. When fortunate enough to draw a ration of meat that was part bone, we would get a great deal of nourishment from it. By breaking a bone into small pieces, with a knife and a stone, and boiling it, we could make quite a decent soup. Until I was a prisoner it was always a wonder to me what satisfaction a dog could possibly derive from gnawing a bone; but from that time my wonder ceased.

TRANSFORMATION IN PERSONAL APPEARANCE.—Although we were continually wasting away to skeletons, the change was not apparent among those of us who were in daily intercourse with each other; but in those comrades from whom we were separated for weeks and months, and then reunited, the change was awful to witness. I lost sight, when we first went to Salisbury, of a young soldier, named M'Feely, from my own regiment, who was short, fat, and full-faced, and did not see him again until the latter part of the winter. I did not think it possible for any one to change in looks so rapidly; his eyes were sunk low in their sockets, cheeks hollow, cheek-bones horribly distinct, and his whole frame emaciated almost to a skeleton. I presume I appeared as greatly changed to him as he did to me. M'Feely died a week before our release.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SECOND REGIMENT.

THE Twentieth Pennsylvania Militia, which had been called out for the defense of the State, in 1862, under command of Colonel William B. Thomas, and again in 1863, was re-organized and recruited in July, 1864, for service in the National army, for a period of one hundred days, as the One Hundred and Ninety-second Regiment of the line. It was recruited in the city of Philadelphia, the troops rendezvousing at Camp Cadwalader, and consisted of fourteen companies, commanded by the following field officers: William B. Thomas, Colonel; Benjamin L. Taylor, Lieutenant Colonel; C. W. M'Clintock, and Henry J. Snyder, Majors. The regiment left Philadelphia on the 23d of July, and proceeded to Baltimore, encamping until the close of the month, about five miles from the city. On the 1st of August, it was ordered to garrison duty at Fort M'Henry. It was here drilled in heavy artillery duty, by a Lieutenant of the regular army. It had been previously well instructed in light infantry tactics by Colonel Thomas. Two weeks later it was relieved at the fort, and proceeded via Harrisburg and Pittsburg, to Johnson's Island, Lake Erie, where were confined large numbers of prisoners of war. It remained here but a few days, when its destination was again changed, and heading southward, it proceeded by rail to Gallipolis, a little town on the Ohio River, nearly opposite the mouth of the Great Kanawha River. Early in the war, the great advantages of this place for a depot of supplies for the Union armies, were recognized, and vast quantities had been accumulated there. To guard these, and ship and re-ship them as needed, was the duty to which the regiment was assigned. This was a responsible and arduous service. Raiding and guerrilla bands were constantly hovering in the neighborhood, and more than one bold plot was formed for the destruction of these supplies, which were of vital importance to the armies in West Virginia and in Tennessee. Detachments were regularly supplied for guard to boats plying upon the river, while others were frequently sent out to break up irregular bands of the enemy. On the 30th of September, companies M, A, B, F, D, L and G, under command of Major M'Clintock, proceeded to Weston, West Virginia, where they served under command of General Kelley, until the close of their term of enlistment. Lieutenant William E. Tyndale, in command of company K, while on his way with his command from Ironton, where he had for six weeks been on duty, to re-join the regiment, was drowned in the Ohio River, on the night of the 21st of October, by being accidentally precipitated from the transport on which he was moving. He was a good officer, and had served with credit at the front, in the earlier years of the war. On the 31st of October, the term of service of the regiment having already expired, the battalion remaining at Gallipolis was relieved, and returned by way of Parkersburg and Baltimore, to Philadelphia, whither the battalion at Weston had preceded it, and on the 11th of November, was mustered out of service. One company, under command of Captain William F. Johnston, re-enlisted for a further term of one year, and formed part of a second regiment, known as the One Hundred and Ninety-second. In the spring of 1863, nine new companies were recruited, which reported as fast as organized, to the commander of the Middle Military Division, with headquarters at Harper's Ferry, where a regimental organization was effected about the middle of March, with the following field officers: William W. Stewart, Colonel; Thomas M'Leester, Lieutenant Colonel; William F. Johnston, Major. When the spring campaign opened, the regiment moved up the valley to Staunton and Lexington; but few of the enemy were met, the fighting here being substantially at an end. It was, however, retained in the department, engaged in various duties, until the 24th of August, when it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-THIRD REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited in compliance with the call of Governor Curtin, to serve for one hundred days, upon the occasion of the raid made by the rebel cavalryman, Harry Gilmore, upon the railroads leading into Baltimore, in July, 1864. Company E was from Lawrence county, and a part of company I from Warren. The remaining companies were recruited at Pittsburg, and were from Allegheny county. They rendezvoused at Camp Howe, near Pittsburg, where a regimental organization was effected on the 19th of July, with the following field officers: John B. Clark, Colonel; James W. Ballentine, Lieutenant Colonel; Horatio K. Tyler, Major. Soon after its organization, it proceeded to Baltimore, and for a period of two weeks was encamped at Mankin's Woods, where it formed part of a brigade commanded by Colonel Nagle, and was thoroughly drilled. On the 10th of August, company B was ordered to Wilmington, Delaware, for the performance of provost duty, and Colonel Clark was directed to station the remaining companies to guard the bridges on the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore Railroad, with headquarters at Havre-de-Grace, which was promptly executed. About three weeks after this disposition had been made, Colonel Clark was ordered to turn over his command to Lieutenant Colonel Ballentine, and to proceed with companies A, F, D and I, to Wilmington, and take command of the district. This he proceeded to do, and placing the companies which he had taken with him in camp, made details from them daily, for various service, as the exigencies of his duty as commandant of the district required. This disposition remained unchanged until after the expiration of the term of service, when the command assembled at Baltimore, and thence proceeded to Pittsburg, where, on the 9th of November, it was mustered out of service. Before quitting the field, Captain M'Munn, of company A, secured the re-enlistment of a considerable number of men from the several companies, to serve during the war, who, upon their arrival at Baltimore, were distributed according to their preferences, among cavalry and infantry regiments, then serving at the front.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited in the counties of Schuylkill, Berks, Luzerne, Lycoming, Montour, Dauphin, Mifflin, Cambria, Bedford, and York, and was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 22d of July, 1864, with the following field officers: James Nagle, Colonel; Richard M. Michael, Lieutenant Colonel; Oscar D. Jenkins, Major. On the day of its organization, it moved for Baltimore, and upon its arrival, went into camp at Mankin's Woods. About the 1st of September, the regiment removed to Camp Carroll, a mile south-west of the city, on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Company K, which had been originally recruited for a cavalry company, soon after its arrival at Baltimore, was detached from the regiment, and stationed at the barracks, a half mile north-west of the Washington Monument. A few weeks later, this company was sent to the eastern shore of Maryland, where it remained, engaged in provost duty, until the close of its service. Companies C, G, H, and I, and parts of companies D, E, and F, were stationed at various points in the city for provost duty. Details from the remaining companies, to serve as escorts and guards to rebel prisoners on their way through the city to places of confinement, and for recruits destined for the front, were being constantly made, as long as the regiment remained in service. At the expiration of its term, the scattered detachments were called in, and it proceeded to Harrisburg, where, on the 6th of November, it was mustered out.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-FIFTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in Lancaster county, in July, 1864, to serve for a period of one hundred days. It was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 24th of July, with the following field officers: Joseph W. Fisher, Colonel; William L. Bear, Lieutenant Colonel; Oliver C. James, Major. On the day of its organization it proceeded to Baltimore, and after a halt of three days, moved on to Monocacy Junction, where, for a period of two months, it was engaged in guarding the bridge spanning the creek, and the lines of railway, and was thoroughly drilled and instructed—many of the officers and men having had no previous military training. On the 1st of October it proceeded to Berkley county, West Virginia, and was posted along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, with headquarters at North Mountain Station, where it remained until the expiration of its term. In the meantime, three hundred of the men re-enlisted to serve for one year, and were, at the end of the original term, consolidated in three companies, remaining on duty under command of Captain Henry D. Markley, as a battalion of the One Hundred and Ninety-fifth. The balance of the regiment was mustered out at Harrisburg, on the 4th of November. In February, 1865, Colonel Fisher was authorized to recruit seven new companies, and re-organize the regiment for a term of one year. The re-organization was effected at Martinsburg, on the 16th of March. Henry D. Markley was made Major, in place of Major James—the only change in the field officers. Soon afterwards, three additional companies were attached to it, temporarily, and it was ordered to Charlestown, where it formed part of the command of General T. W. Egan. On the 1st of April, the regiment was sent out under command of Lieutenant Colonel Bear, to guard the fords of the Shenandoah River, with headquarters at Kabletown, returning to camp on the 4th, and moving on the following day to Stevenson's Station. On the 22d, it was ordered to duty at Berryville, the order declaring that this regiment had been selected for the delicate duty of preserving quiet in the midst of a hostile people, on account of its excellent reputation for good discipline, and proceeded thither, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Bear, Colonel Fisher being at this time in command of a brigade. On the 6th of June, the regiment, in conjunction with the One Hundred and Ninety-second, moved up the valley as far as Harrisonburg, three companies, under command of Major Markley, proceeding with the rest of the brigade as far as Staunton. While on the way, the three companies which had composed the veteran battalion, were, in pursuance of orders of the War Department, mustered out of service. On the 26th, the balance of the regiment assembled at Harrisonburg, and proceeded thence to Washington, arriving on the 1st of August. It was here employed in guarding government property, in which duty it continued until the 31st of January, 1866, when it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited under the auspices of the Union League Association of Philadelphia, to serve for one hundred days, and was known as the Fifth Union League Regiment. It was organized at Camp Cadwalader, near the city, on the 20th of July, 1864, and a week later proceeded to Camp Bradford, at Mankin's Woods, near Baltimore. About the middle of August, it moved by rail to Chicago, Illinois, where it was employed in guarding Camp Douglass, in which was confined a large number of prisoners of war. On the 26th, company H was detached from the regiment and sent to Springfield, Illinois, where, until the expiration of its term of service, it performed provost duty. The regiment returned to Philadelphia, early in November, and upon its arrival, was ordered to temporary duty at Fort Delaware, whither it immediately proceeded. It was mustered out of service at Philadelphia, on the 17th of November, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited at Philadelphia, and in neighboring counties, to serve for a period of one hundred days, by the assistance of the Coal Exchange Association, of that city, and was known as the Third Coal Exchange Regiment. It was organized at Camp Cadwalader, on the 22d of July, 1864, with the following field officers: John R. Haslett, Colonel; Charles D. Kenworthy, Lieutenant Colonel; John Woodcock, Major. Colonel Haslett had served as Captain in the Sixty-sixth, and subsequently in the Seventy-third, of which he had been for several months the acting Major; Lieutenant Colonel Kenworthy had served on the Peninsula, in the Third United States Infantry, where he was severely wounded, and Major Woodcock had just been mustered out of a nine months' regiment. A large proportion of officers and men were well schooled soldiers. Soon after its organization, it proceeded to Camp Bradford, at Mankin's Woods, near Baltimore, where it remained for two weeks. At the end of that time, and when well drilled and in full expectation of being led to the front, it was ordered to Rock Island, Illinois, and upon its arrival there, was charged with guarding a camp for prisoners of war. The guard provided was insufficient for the duty required, and the service bore heavily upon this regiment. At the close of its term, it returned to Philadelphia, where, on the 11th of November, 1864, it was mustered out.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited in the city of Philadelphia, under the direction and aid of the Union League Association, during the summer of 1864. Recruiting was commenced soon after the muster out of service of the Reserve Corps, and Horatio G. Sickel, who had commanded the Third Reserve Regiment, was selected in conjunction with James H. Orne, Esq., Chairman of the Executive Committee of the association, to superintend the work of filling the ranks and organizing the command. In five weeks it was completed, and on the 9th of September, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: Horatio G. Sickel, Colonel; John B. Murray, Lieutenant Colonel; Edwin A. Glenn, Major. Early on the morning of the 19th, the regiment moved from camp, and pausing at the Headquarters of the Union League to receive the State colors, thence proceeded to join the army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg. Upon its arrival it was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, of the Fifth Corps, and joined it at a point on the Weldon Railroad, which had just been captured from the enemy. Soon after its arrival, Colonel Sickel was placed in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Murray succeeded to the command of the regiment.

The battle of Peeble's Farm opened on the 30th, and here the regiment had its first baptism of fire. It had scarcely got into position, when incessant volleys of musketry and artillery were opened upon it from a wood in front, where the enemy was posted. Advancing at once to the attack, the regiment opened fire, and though little accustomed to the terrible ordeal to which it was subjected, finally succeeded by hard fighting, in driving the enemy from the first line of works, inflicting severe loss upon him, two of his field officers being included among the prisoners.* Breast-works were immediately thrown up, and here the regiment remained heavily engaged until the 2d of October, when it moved up near the enemy's works, where, for five hours, it held its ground under a severe fire. It was then withdrawn a short distance, and again threw up works, and on the following day went into camp half a mile to the rear. The regiment lost in this engagement one killed and five wounded. On the 27th, it moved with the corps for a demonstration upon the South Side Railroad, in which it was joined by the Second and Ninth Corps. With four days' rations and forty rounds of ammunition to the man, it moved at daylight, and after five hours toilsome marching, through dense timber, arrived in front of the enemy's formidable works, where it was exposed to a severe artillery fire. At sunset a strong picket line was thrown out, which was engaged nearly the entire night. Until noon of the following day, the pickets were kept busy, when the entire regiment was withdrawn two miles to the rear, where it was posted in support of batteries, but soon after returned to its encampment on the Squirrel Level Road. Here comfortable quarters were erected, in which the National Thanksgiving on the 27th of November was spent, in the enjoyment of a profusion of dainties sent by kind friends of members of the command at Philadelphia. On the 6th of December it marched with the corps for the destruction of the Weldon Railroad. Until the evening of the 9th, the work of destruction was vigorously pushed, the ties being burned and the rails twisted for a considerable distance beyond Beltsfield. Upon the return march there was much suffering, the weather being intensely cold, and the troops being exposed to the peltings of a pitiless storm. Winter quarters were again erected, and a neat chapel for religious and other meetings was built, as had been previously done at the encampment on the Squirrel Level Road. Lieutenant Colonel Murray was relieved on account of physical disability on the 27th of December, and the command devolved on Major Glenn.

* In referring to this action, General Sickel says: "While our brigade was forming for the charge, the regimental commander misunderstood the order, and filed his regiment into a piece of woods in the rear, leaving our left exposed. When the right of the line reached the enemy's works, I found our flanks exposed and threatened, and a disaster might have been the result, but for the discerning sagacity of Captain John E. Parsons, Adjutant General of the brigade, who galloped all through a storm of bullets, re-formed the regiment, and directing the charge in person, routed the enemy, and the result was a complete victory."

On the 5th of February, 1865, the Fifth Corps, in light marching order, moved for an assault upon the enemy's works, and came upon them near Hatcher's Run. At three in the afternoon, the advance of the column encountered, and after a desperate struggle, carried a portion of his fortifications. Soon afterwards, the First Division, commanded by General Griffin, was sent for a diversion towards Dinwiddie Court House. This feint was a complete success. A large force of the enemy followed it, thus weakening the lines in front of the main body of the corps, which assaulted when this force was well away, and carried his works. Upon the return of the division, it was placed in the captured works, and a heavy skirmish line was thrown out. At three on the afternoon of the 6th, it was attacked by a heavy force of the enemy and driven in, a general engagement ensuing. General Sickel, seeing that the Second Brigade was hard pressed, led his command to its support. The One Hundred and Ninety-eighth moved at double quick, through mud and water, and wheeling sharply to the right into an open field, charged with shouts upon Mahone's rebel forces. Sickel with sword in hand led the charge, and with desperate valor his men fell upon the foe. After a sanguinary struggle, in which General Sickel received from a rifle shot, a painful flesh wound in the left thigh, the brigade succeeded in driving him from the field and re-establishing its lines. Determined to re-gain his lost ground, if valor could accomplish it, the enemy massed his forces during the night, and approaching cautiously, attacked in the darkness with overpowering force. For a time he gained possession of a part of the Union works. At the first signal of alarm, the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth rushed to arms, and delivering a volley, sprang upon the foe with the bayonet. The struggle for a time was hand to hand, muskets being clubbed, and bayonets freely used. He was finally beaten back, and amidst the fiery flashes of the musketry and of bursting shells, the works were re-gained and made secure. Strong lines of works were erected in rear, on the opposite side of Hatcher's Run, for the more ample protection of the position, and on the 14th, when the defenses were completed, the regiment moved half a mile to the rear, and for the third time built winter quarters and a chapel. The loss during the operations of the 6th and 7th, was three killed and thirteen wounded. Lieutenant Charles W. Frazier was among the killed, and Captain J. H. Withington, Jr., among the wounded.

On the 25th of March, the enemy having pierced the Ninth Corps' lines at Fort Steadman, the regiment was early put in motion, and during nearly the entire day was kept upon the march for the support of portions of the line where active operations were in progress. Late on the evening of the 28th, it was ordered to strike tents and rest upon its arms in readiness for an early march, the whole army awaiting the signal to deliver a decisive blow. At three o'clock on the morning of the 29th, the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth marched at double quick, leading the corps in a southerly direction, and crossing Roundy Creek below the junction of Gravelly and Hatcher's runs, pursued the road to Dinwiddie Court House as far as the Quaker Road, into which it turned, and again crossing Gravelly Run, encountered the enemy near the Old Saw Mill, where he was strongly posted behind earth-works. A cleared field stretched out in front of his fortifications, which was flanked on either side by heavy timber, in which his sharp-shooters were posted. Across this space of a thousand yards, the regiment, in conjunction with the One Hundred and Eighty-fifth New York, and led by Sickel, dashed with determined bravery, and though receiving murderous volleys from front and flanks, reserved its fire until near the works, when, pouring in a well directed shot, it rushed upon the foe with the bayonet. The struggle for a few moments was at close quarters and desperate; but the firm bearing of the men of this brigade was triumphant, and the enemy was driven, though fighting most determinedly, and disputing every inch of ground with great valor. On reaching the Boydton Plank Road, unable to withstand the steady pressure brought to bear upon him, he broke and fled in confusion. In this action, known as the battle of Lewis' Farm, the regiment sustained grievous losses. Major Charles I. Macenen and Captain George W. Mulfrey were killed, and General Sickel, Captains Samuel Wrigley, Benjamin F. Gardner and Thomas C. Spackman, and Lieutenants Jeremiah C. Keller and William A. Miller wounded. The entire loss was three hundred and eleven, of whom twenty-eight were killed and one hundred and seventeen wounded. After the surrender of Lee, the rebel General Ewell, in speaking of this battle, told General Chamberlain, that the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth, supported by the One Hundred and Eighty-fifth New York, and one battery of the Fifth United States Artillery, were fighting no less than three brigades of the best Confederate troops.

The regiment bivouacked upon the field, where it remained for thirty-six hours, exposed during a part of the time to a driving storm. On the morning of the 31st, it again moved off, leading the column, and came upon the enemy at White Oak Swamp. Quickly forming, it was led to the attack, and after a spirited action, drove him from the field. The loss was six killed and forty-six wounded. Lieutenant A. A. Pomeroy was among the killed and Captain Isaac Schroeder mortally wounded. Soon after the conclusion of the battle, the regiment moved forward towards Five Forks, and bivouacked for the night. On the following day it greeted with hearty cheers Sheridan's Cavalry, and when he had passed, joined in the movement, plunging into a dense thicket of pine which lay before it. Scarcely an hour had elapsed, when the stillness of the forest was broken by the sharp fire of the skirmishers, followed by heavy volleys. Hastening forward, the regiment soon reached the scene of conflict, encountering the enemy's skirmishers, and driving them in upon his heavy defensive works. As the Union line emerged from the timber, an assault was ordered, which was gallantly made, but failed to dislodge the enemy. As the troops were falling back, General Chamberlain, who was in command of the division, dashed up to Major Glenn, quietly awaiting orders, and exclaimed, "Major! can you take those works, and hold them?" Turning to his men, the Major asked, "boys, will you follow me?" With a wild cheer they answered, and pressing with their standard close upon the footsteps of their brave leader, dashed forward in the face of a terrific fire of musketry with irresistible force. Thrice was the standard beaten down, and as often was caught up and borne bravely forward, until finally, blood-stained and torn, it floated in triumph over the works. The enemy was driven and his ground was held. Filled with a soldier's pride, General Chamberlain, who had witnessed this gallant and triumphant charge, rode forward to congratulate the leader, and order his promotion on the field. But, alas! at the moment when the triumph was assured, and Major Glenn had seized one of the enemy's colors from the hands of a rebel standard bearer, he was pierced by a bullet, which inflicted a mortal wound. The evidences of rout and confusion were visible on every hand, and prisoners, guns, and battle-flags fell to the hands of the conquerors. The loss in the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth, was one killed and fifteen wounded. That night the regiment slept upon the field of its triumph, and at eleven on the following morning, moved on one of the most tiresome marches of its entire service, extending far into the night, and being resumed at light of the following day. On the 5th, the joyful tidings was received, that Richmond had fallen, and that Lee was retreating with his whole army. On the marching column pressed, passing the debris of the fleeing enemy, and guided by the thunder of Sheridan's relentless guns. Late on the evening of the 8th, overcome with exhaustion, the troops threw themselves upon the ground and slept soundly. On the morrow, they were early on the march, and passing through a narrow curtain of wood, suddenly came upon a grand spectacle. There, on the wide fields stretching far away, and surrounded by heavy timber, completely hemmed in by the Union forces, was Lee's entire army. The skirmishers advanced, and the enemy withdrew to his main line; but soon a white flag was displayed, and the news of the surrender quickly spread from rank to rank through the Union army. On the 11th, the enemy stacked arms and furled his flags, and on the 15th, the regiment commenced the homeward march. At Arlington Heights it went into camp, where it remained until the 3d of June, when it was mustered out of service, and returning to Philadelphia, was received with demonstrations of rejoicing.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-NINTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was organized at Philadelphia, in the fall of 1864, to serve for the period of one year, with the following field officers: James C. Briscoe, Colonel; Ambrose A. Lechler, Lieutenant Colonel; William A. F. Gehr, Major. Many of the officers and men had seen service in other organizations, Colonel Briscoe having served upon the staffs of several general officers, as Chief of Engineers, and Lieutenant Colonel Lechler as Colonel of the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth. Upon being ordered to the field in October, it proceeded to Deep Bottom Landing, on the James, and was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, taking position upon the extreme right of the line of the army of the James, on the New Market Road. It was immediately put to fortifying, and soon had substantial breast-works, with well poised abatis in front. Shortly after its arrival, the Army of the James went into winter-quarters, and during the inclement season, hostile demonstrations were almost entirely suspended. During this period the regiment was thoroughly drilled, and was employed on picket duty, in building fortifications, and in cutting and constructing roads. The discipline was strict, and the sanitary provisions most excellent, so that spring found the command in good condition for active service.

On the 27th of March, 1865, the division received marching orders, and crossing the James on the following day, moved southward, marching the entire night, and arrived on the 29th, in front of the rebel works. On the 2d of April, the division was led to the assault. Forts Gregg and Alexander, two strong works were in front, well mounted and efficiently manned. Against these the Union assaulting line was repeatedly led, but without success. Finally a strong column was formed, and being led with great spirit and determination, compelled the garrison, after having had three-quarters of its number slain, to surrender. President Lincoln, who was at the time at City Point, telegraphed the news of this success to the Secretary of War, in these words: "A portion of Foster's Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, made a most gallant charge this afternoon, and captured a very important fort from the enemy, with its entire garrison." The regiment participated in the charge here alluded to, and suffered severely. Eighteen of its number were killed or mortally wounded, including two officers, Captain Patrick O'Murphy and Lieutenant Robert McMillan, and ninety-one wounded, including six officers, Colonel Briscoe, Captains John G. Bippus, Oliver C. Gregory, and Lieutenants Frank Ellison, Price C. Williams, and James Patton. For his gallantry in this action, Colonel Briscoe was brevetted Brigadier General, and placed in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Robert P. Hughes, who had succeeded Lieutenant Colonel Lechler, took command of the regiment.

As soon as the victory at Petersburg was made complete, the regiment joined in the pursuit of the retreating rebel army, following along the South Side Railroad to Burkesville, and thence to Appomattox, skirmishing by the way, having two killed and one wounded in the affair at Rice's Station on the 6th, and two killed and eight wounded in the final collision of the two armies on the 9th, near Appomattox Court House. Soon after the surrender, which occurred on the same day, the division was ordered to Richmond, and went into camp upon its arrival, two miles north of the city. Here the regiment remained, engaged in various duties until the 23d of June, when it was mustered out of service. The recruits were transferred to the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth regiment, of which Colonel Briscoe was made commander, and with that regiment was stationed at various points throughout Virginia, for provost duty. They were finally mustered out of service on the 14th of December.

TWO HUNDREDTH REGIMENT.

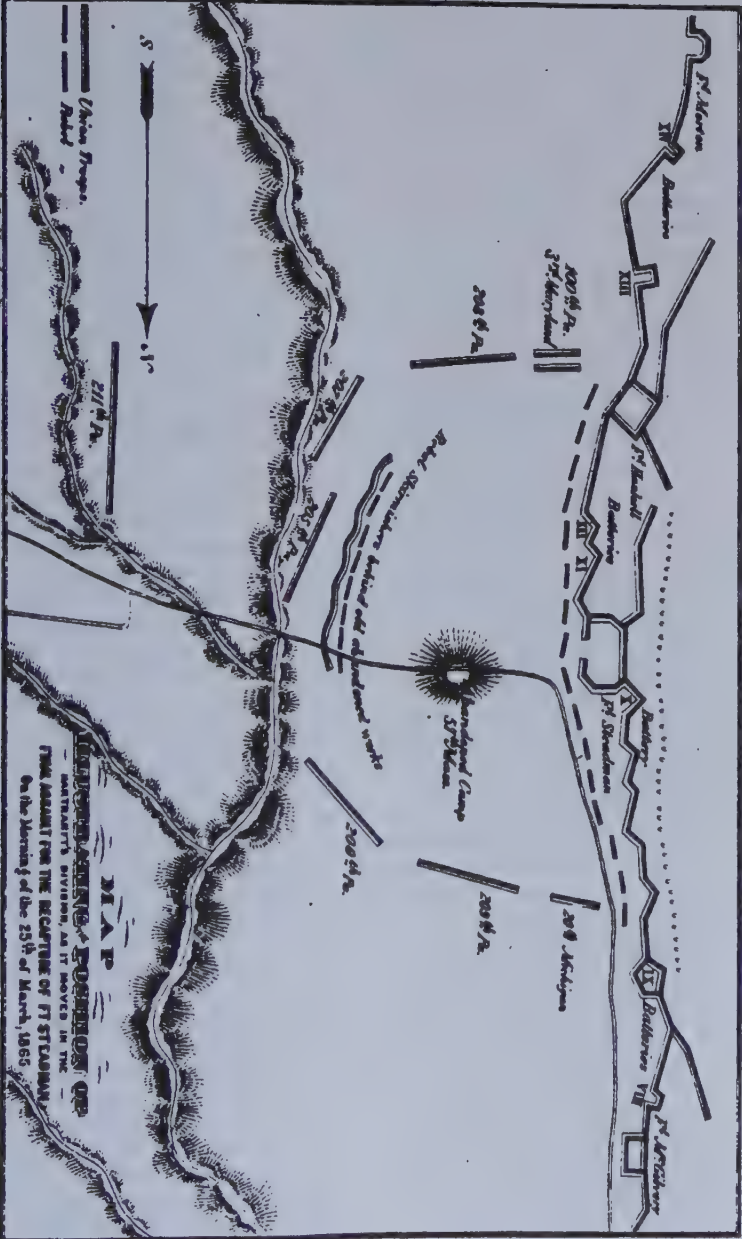

THE troops composing this regiment were principally recruited in the counties of York, Cumberland, and Dauphin, to serve for one year, and were organized at Camp Curtin, on the 3d of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Charles W. Diven, formerly Major of the Twelfth Reserve, Colonel; W. H. H. McCall, formerly a Captain in the Fifth Reserve, Lieutenant Colonel; Jacob Behrer, formerly a Captain in the Sixth Reserve, Major. On the 9th of September, it was ordered to join the army of the James, and upon its arrival at the front, was posted near Dutch Gap, where it rendered efficient service in holding the line.

On the night of the 19th of November, the enemy made an attack, with the design of breaking the Union line, but was handsomely repulsed, the Two Hundredth taking an active part and sharing in the triumph. On the 28th, the regiment was transferred to the army of the Potomac, where it was brigaded with the Two Hundred and Eighth and Two Hundred and Ninth Pennsylvania regiments, constituting the First Brigade, Third Division* of the Ninth Corps, to the command of which Colonel Diven was assigned, General Hartman commanding the division, and General Parke the corps. The corps at this time occupied the line of intrenchments on the Petersburg front, stretching from the Appomattox to Fort Walker. Hartman's Division was posted in rear of the main line, as a reserve force, the Two Hundredth occupying a camp near the Dunn House Battery, on the road leading up to Fort Steadman. During the winter the regiment was thoroughly drilled, and performed fatigue duty upon works thrown up for the protection of the rear of the army. It also participated in several movements in which the division acted as a support to other corps, but did not become actively engaged.

As the time approached for the general movement of the Union army on the spring campaign, the rebel leader sought by some daring stroke to loosen the grasp of his antagonist. Should such a blow prove effective, he might still hold his ground, or should it fail, it might serve by attracting troops to the threatened point, to open a way of retreat to form a junction with Johnston in North Carolina. Accordingly, on the night of the 24th of March, 1865, without materially weakening his main line, he concentrated three powerful divisions

* Organization of the Third Division, General John F. Hartman; Ninth Corps, General John G. Parke; First Brigade commanded by Colonel Charles W. Diven; Two Hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel W. H. H. McCall; Two Hundred and Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Alfred B. McCalmont; Two Hundred and Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Tobias B. Kauffman. Second Brigade commanded by Colonel Joseph A. Matthews; Two Hundred and Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel William F. Walter; Two Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Robert C. Cox; Two Hundred and Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel James H. Trimble.

under Generals Gordon and Ransom, on the extreme east of the rebel line, opposite Fort Steadman, and the commanding ground about Meade's Station, on the military railroad connecting with the base of supply to the whole army at City Point, and at a little before light on the morning of the 25th, having stealthily approached and silenced the Union pickets, burst in overpowering columns upon the main line, capturing at a blow Fort Steadman, and batteries to right and left from Fort Haskell to Battery 9, thus swinging open wide gates in the fortified line, and successfully preparing the way for the advance of the powerful rebel supports which stood ready to move. The portion of the line broken, was at the time occupied by McLaughlin's Brigade of Wilcox's Division, the greater portion of which was captured. General Hartranft, ever on the alert in the hour of danger, whose division was lying in reserve in rear of the Ninth Corps line, detecting by the sound of the fray, that a powerful and determined attack was being made, dispatched an aid, Captain Dalien, from his headquarters at the Avery House, to the scene of conflict, over a mile and a-half to the right. At ten minutes past five, the aid returned, disclosing the tale of disaster. In the meantime, General Hartranft had notified his brigade commanders to hold their troops in readiness to move at an instant's notice, and on receipt of an order from General Parke to reinforce General Wilcox, which came at the moment of mounting, he galloped off to General Wilcox's headquarters, two miles away, and about a mile and a quarter in rear of Fort Steadman. After a moment's consultation, he determined to lead his command at once upon the enemy, and directing the Two Hundred and Ninth to move to the right down a ravine, where it would have partial shelter, he proceeded with the Two Hundredth which was nearest to, and immediately in rear of the Fort, to face the enemy, who was rapidly advancing, having already overrun and captured the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, and all but a handful of the men. These had rallied at an old rebel work and were contesting the ground with the enemy's skirmishers. On coming up to these, he ordered them to advance, and followed with his regiment in line of battle, until he had reached the brow of the hill, where was the camp of the Fifty-seventh. Here the fire became very hot, but the ground was held, and a steady and most destructive fire returned. Finally, however, finding the enemy too strong, and the right of the regiment suffering severely from a heavy fire from the Fort and from the road in front, it was forced to retire a few rods to an old line of works. Immediately rallying and re-forming, it was again led forward to a commanding position, where its fire was most destructive, and where it in turn suffered fearfully. For twenty minutes the regiment stood firm, while the work of carnage went on. But the storm of deadly missiles which here swept its ranks, exposed as it was, was too terrible to withstand, and it again fell back to the old line of works, where it was re-formed. Other troops had now come up, and were also engaged, the Two Hundred and Ninth standing on its right, and with two small regiments of Michigan troops, the Second and Seventeenth, reaching out to Battery 9. On its left for a short distance, the enemy still held an old line of works nearly continuous with that held by the Two Hundredth; but beyond, was the Two Hundred and Eighth regiment, which, together with detachments from the First Division, reached to Fort Haskell. In rear of the centre, in the ravine, under cover, were the Two Hundred and Fifth and Two Hundred and Seventh, and upon the high ground, a mile back, near Meade's Station, was the Two Hundred and Eleventh. Having thus drawn a cordon around the break and visited every part of the line, and having received from General Parke an order to re-take the lost works, General Hartranft made his dispositions for attack. To each of his regiments he sent a notice that he would move to the assault in fifteen minutes, and that the advance of the Two Hundred and Eleventh upon the commanding ground in rear, should be the signal for a concerted movement. This regiment had nearly full ranks, and when drawn out in line, it showed like a brigade. As it began to move, the enemy was seen to waver, and as the entire line dashed resolutely forward, the rebels threw down their arms in large numbers, and began to pass through the advancing ranks to the rear. The triumph was complete. Steadman was re-taken, and the entire portion of the line lost, was re-gained. The loss in the regiment in this brief engagement was very severe, being fourteen killed and one hundred and nine wounded, an aggregate of one hundred and twenty-three. Colonel Diven, in command of the brigade, Captain Frank A. Hoffman, and Lieutenants Martin L. Duhling, William H. Drayer, Thomas C. Crawford, and John M'Williams were among the wounded. Lieutenant Colonel M'Call, who led the regiment, says in his official report: "The officers and men of my command all behaved with the greatest daring and bravery. Captain Hoffman seized the colors in the hands of a rebel color-bearer, but was shot through the hand and knocked down with a musket, retaining a piece of the flag which he tore from the standard. Private Levi A. Smith, of company E, deserves particular mention. After the color-bearer had been shot down, I grasped the colors and called for some one to take them, when he, boy as he was, sprang forward, and carried them throughout the action." General Hartranft, in his official report, says: "The Two Hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel M'Call commanding, deserves particular mention. This regiment was put to the severest test, and behaved with the greatest firmness and steadiness. The regiment made two stubborn attacks on the enemy, and when compelled to retire, it fell back in good order." General Parke, in his dispatch to General Grant, says: "Great praise is due to Hartranft for the skill displayed in handling his division, which behaved with great gallantry, in this, its first engagement." Soon after the conclusion of the battle, the enemy sent in a flag of truce for removing his dead and wounded, and under it, Major Bertolotte, General Hartranft's Assistant Adjutant General, delivered one hundred and twenty dead, and fourteen badly wounded. The works were re-gained, with all the guns uninjured, and nearly three thousand prisoners with small arms and battle flags were captured.

The following stirring order was issued by General Hartranft, congratulating his division: "With feelings of pride and satisfaction, the Brigadier General commanding, tenders his congratulations to the men and officers of his command for their gallant and heroic conduct in the brilliant achievement of to-day, which resulted in the re-capture of Fort Steadman and the entire line, together with battle-flags, a large number of prisoners, and small arms. You have won a name and reputation of which veterans might feel proud, and have proved yourselves worthy of being the associates of the brave soldiers of the old Ninth Corps, and the General commanding hopes that this, your first engagement, and signal victory, will nerve and stimulate you for the performance of future deeds of gallantry. To the wounded, and to the families of those who have so nobly fallen in defense of their country, the General commanding tenders his most heartfelt sympathies."

Active operations were now fairly inaugurated, and later on the same day, there was severe fighting further to the left, which resulted in the capture of five hundred of the enemy. On the evening of the 30th, the division was massed, and formed for an assault, but before moving, the order directing it was countermanded. On the evening of the 1st of April, the order was renewed, and the dispositions again made for an assault. At four A. M. of the 2d, it was delivered, Lieutenant Colonel McCall leading the brigade, and Major Behrer the regiment. The column was formed in front of Fort Sedgwick, the left resting on the Jerusalem Plank Road, Potter's Division being formed on the left of the road, to whose movements it was to conform. Strong parties of Engineers were thrown forward to cut away the abatis, and to break the wires connecting the chevaux-de-frise, so as to make openings for the advance of the assaulting party. This work was thoroughly done, and the column advanced in the most gallant manner. As it moved on, it was subjected to a severe fire from the front, and from powerful batteries which raked the ground where it was obliged to pass; but the works were triumphantly carried, and the guns which were found were turned upon the foe. The Two Hundredth was held in reserve, when the first dash was made, but was ordered to follow almost immediately, and was subjected to a like destructive fire. "It is but justice here to state," says Major Behrer in his official report, "that the officers and men of my regiment did, in this charge under a heavy fire from the enemy, behave with great gallantry and coolness, at no time showing the least sign of faltering or breaking. At this point of the enemy's works we came in possession of two batteries, each mounting three guns. I at once sent to the rear for artillerists, who were accordingly furnished, and the captured guns turned upon the enemy. These works were held during the entire day by my regiment, and were all the time under a heavy fire of mixed artillery. Three desperate and determined charges were made by the enemy, in which they put forth every effort to re-capture the forts, but they were each time repulsed speedily and with heavy loss. * * * After darkness had set in, I was ordered to remove the abatis and chevaux-de-frise formerly used by the enemy and now in our rear, round so as to confront and face the enemy, and I at the same time advanced one hundred men as a picket line. After this period no attempt was made by the enemy to re-take the works, and by ten P. M., firing began to be less rapid. At midnight no firing at all was done, except now and then a shot from a sharp-shooter." At four on the following morning, the division advanced rapidly, and entered the city of Petersburg unopposed, the enemy having withdrawn during the night. The loss in the engagement was two killed, thirty-four wounded and three missing, an aggregate of thirty-nine. Major Behrer was among the wounded, but did not leave the field.

The pursuit of the rebel army was at once commenced, the corps following the line of the South Side Railroad, and was continued with brief intervals for rest, until the 9th, when the rebel army surrendered. The regiment then went into camp at Nottoway Court House, where it remained until after the surrender of Johnston, when it marched to City Point, and thence proceeded by transport to Alexandria. Here it remained until the 30th of May, when the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment were mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIRST REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited at Harrisburg, for one year's service, in compliance with an order of Governor Curtin, of the 29th of July, 1864, issued under the call of the President of July 18th, for five hundred thousand men. With the exception of a part of company K, recruited in Franklin county, and squadrons from Duncannon and Fairview, in the counties of Perry and Cumberland, the men were from Dauphin county. Of the ten regiments required from Pennsylvania, under this call, this was the first ready for duty, its ranks having been filled to the maximum strength in less than thirty days. The men rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were organized in companies, clothed, armed, and equipped, and on the 29th of August, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: F. Asbury Ayl, Colonel; J. Wesley Ayl, Lieutenant Colonel; John T. Morgan, Major. The field officers had all served in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment, and large numbers of the line officers and men had previously been in the field. Immediately after its organization, it proceeded to Chambersburg, and went into camp five miles from the town, near the point where the pike crosses Back Creek. It was here schooled and regularly drilled, and on the 12th, started on a three days' march for exercise. On the 17th of September, company H was ordered to York, for duty at the general hospital established there, and on the same day, companies F and G, were ordered to Bloody Run, and upon their arrival reported to General O. S. Ferry, in command of the Juniata District. Shortly afterwards company F was sent to McConnellsburg, and during the fall and winter, these two companies were employed in the disagreeable, but arduous duties of arresting deserters, nearly five hundred being apprehended and sent to the front. In December, General Ferry was relieved, and Major Morgan, of the Two Hundred and First, was assigned to the command of the district. On the 18th of September, company E was ordered to Scranton, and upon its arrival, reported to Captain S. N. Bradford, Provost Marshal of the district, and was employed in provost duty. On the 22d, the remaining companies were again led out upon a three days' march for exercise, accompanied by artillery. On the 28th, the command was ordered to Pittsburg, and had proceeded as far as Huntingdon, when the order was countermanded, and it was directed to proceed via Washington and Alexandria to Manassas Junction, and was deployed for duty along the line of the Manassas Gap Railroad, with headquarters at Gainville. Subsequently it moved to Thoroughfare Gap, where it remained until the road was broken up and the iron removed. On the 13th of November, it was ordered to Alexandria, and was placed in Camp

Blough. It was here engaged in guard duty in the city, in the defenses south of the Potomac, and upon railroad trains, and as escort to recruits and stragglers on their way to the front. Many of the officers of the regiment were detailed as members on a general court martial. Lieutenant Colonel Awi was, early in May, placed in command of the Soldiers' Rest at Alexandria, which was a camp for distribution, and remained there until the summons came for him to re-join his regiment for muster out.

On the 24th of May, 1865, the company which had been on duty at Bloody Run, in pursuance of orders, proceeded to Pittsburg, where it was put upon provost duty, and its commander, Captain Enaminger, was made Provost Marshal of the post. Two days later, the main body of the regiment at Alexandria, was ordered to duty at Fort Delaware, where it remained until the close of its term. About the middle of June, the scattered detachments assembled at Harrisburg, where, on the 21st, the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND SECOND REGIMENT.

COMPANY A, of this regiment, was recruited in Carbon county, B in Juniata, C in Adams, D in Northumberland and Cumberland, E in Lehigh, F in Northampton, G and H in Cumberland, I in Union, and K in Huntingdon. Recruiting commenced early in August, the troops rendezvousing at Camp Curtin, where, on the 3d of September, the regiment was organized, by the choice of the following field officers: Charles Albright, of Carbon county, Colonel; John A. Maus, of Union county, Lieutenant Colonel; Walter H. Seip, of Lehigh county, Major. Colonel Albright had served as Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment, and a number of other officers and a portion of the men had been in the service; but the majority of the command knew little of military duty. On the 10th, the regiment proceeded to Camp Couch, near the town of Chambersburg, where it was subjected to thorough drill, and on the 23d was led out on a three days' march for exercise. General Couch, who was in command of the Department of the Susquehanna, having encountered some opposition in the execution of his orders in Columbia county, sent Colonel Albright to the scene of the disturbance, who was, consequently, for some time, absent from his regiment, but in the meantime performed the duties of his difficult mission to the entire satisfaction of the Commanding General.

On the 29th, the regiment proceeded via Washington, to Alexandrin, and upon its arrival, was sent by General Slough, in command of the post, to duty on the Manassas Gap Railroad, taking position along the road from Thoroughfare Gap to Rectortown. General Sheridan had just previous opened his brilliant campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, and over this road the supplies for his army were transported. To keep it open, was consequently of vital importance, and to break it up and hinder and destroy trains, was a cherished purpose of the disloyal inhabitants dwelling along the line, and of Moseby and his guerrillas, who claimed this as their favorite stamping ground. This duty was exceedingly arduous and harassing. If a soldier went outside the lines, he was immediately set upon, and either murdered or sent away into captivity. Frequent collisions occurred, in some of which the skirmishing was brisk; those at Salem on the 8th and 16th, resulting in some loss. In both of these the enemy was driven, a number of his men being killed and wounded. On the 10th, a party of the enemy succeeded in throwing a train of cars from the track while running at full speed, killing four or five, and severely wounding about twenty. Not content with this, they poured repeated volleys upon the poor sufferers in the wreck. Upon hearing of this outrage, Colonel Albright hastened to the scene of the disaster, and immediately ordered that every building, within the radius of one mile of the wreck, should be burned. To secure trains against similar disasters in the future, all the prominent rebels along the line were apprehended, and a portion of them made to accompany each train. This had the desired effect, and the trains were no more disturbed. In speaking of this part of its service, Colonel Albright says: "The soldiers would have preferred being with the army at the front to doing this duty. Guarding railroads is always distasteful to soldiers, they being in constant danger, and without any opportunity, scarcely, of winning honorable distinction. But they appreciated the necessity of the work and cheerfully performed it." "Constant activity and vigilance," says another officer, "were required; for guerrilla bands, frequently disguised in our uniforms, constantly prowled about the country, attacking detachments inferior to them in numbers, and, like the stealthy Indian of the western frontier, creeping upon our sentries and assassinating them."

When the triumphs of Sheridan in the valley were assured, and the enemy effectually routed, this railroad was abandoned, and the ties and rails were removed to Alexandria. In this laborious duty the regiment was engaged, and when completed, it retired to Alexandria, where it was assigned to the duty of guarding a portion of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, extending from Bull Run to Alexandria, with headquarters at Fairfax Station. In the vicinity of the Station, four large works were built, and the troops were kept busy in protecting the woodmen engaged in chopping, and the teams in moving wood to the Station for the use of the army. In a communication sent on the 1st of January, 1865, as a New Year's greeting to the regiment by General Gamble, in command of the brigade, occurs the following acknowledgment of its good conduct and the soldierly qualities of its commander: "From my personal knowledge, and the report of the inspecting officer, I consider it my duty to return you my thanks for your energy and personal attention to the duties and interests of your command. You have a good regiment, and I am glad to know the right kind of a Colonel is at the head of it."

Towards the close of May, 1865, the regiment was ordered to Philadelphia, where it reported upon its arrival to General Cadwalader, and was sent by him to the anthracite coal regions of the State. Headquarters of the regiment were established at Tamaqua, and the command was distributed in detachments to various points in that region. Colonel Albright, who had been previously brevetted Brigadier General, was placed in command of the district. Early in July, company A was sent to Pittsburg. Towards the close of July, the detachments assembled in Harrisburg, and on the 3d of August, the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRD REGIMENT.

THE troops composing this regiment were recruited at the suggestion of General Birney, to serve as sharpshooters in his division; but the General dying soon after their reaching the field, they were treated as an ordinary infantry regiment. They were from the city of Philadelphia, and from the counties of Lycoming, Lancaster, Chester, and Delaware, and were organized at Camp Cadwalader, near Philadelphia, on the 10th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: John W. Moore, Colonel; Jonas W. Lyman, Lieutenant Colonel; Oliver P. Harding, Major. Colonel Moore had served as Major in the Ninety-ninth, Lieutenant Colonel Lyman as Surgeon of the Fifty-seventh, and the entire field and staff were veteran officers. On the 22d the regiment departed for the front, and on the 27th arrived before Petersburg, where it was assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Tenth Corps. On the same day, the Tenth and Eighteenth corps moved to Deep Bottom, on the James, and advanced upon the enemy's works, at Chapin's Farm and the New Market Road, achieving a signal success. During the engagement, the regiment performed provost duty at Deep Bottom, escorting prisoners to the rear, and picketing Malvern Hill. On the 5th it moved up to the front, re-joining its brigade, and participated in the engagement of the 7th, where the enemy assumed the offensive, but where his repeated assaults were repulsed, and the ground lost by the cavalry under Kautz regained. Until the 27th, it remained in the works, but on that day moved out with the corps on the Darbytown Road, where the enemy was encountered, and a strong demonstration on his front made, returning on the following day to its former position. The regiment lost one killed and six wounded in this engagement. Subsequently the army of the James was re-organized, and the Two Hundred and Third became part of the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Twenty-fourth Corps, the brigade being under command of Colonel Pennypacker, and the division under General Ames.

On the 7th of December, the infantry troops destined for the attack on Fort Fisher, consisting of Ames' Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, and Paine's of the Twenty-fifth, about six thousand five hundred strong, moved from camp, and proceeding to Fortress Monroe, embarked upon transports on the 13th, to accompany the powerful naval force in readiness to sail under Admiral Porter. On the 24th the bombardment of the fort commenced, and on the 25th, a force of three thousand troops landed. Two hundred boys belonging to the Junior North Carolina Reserves were captured, and a reconnoitering force under General Curtis, succeeded in reaching the parapets of the fort; but General Butler, who led the expedition, and General Weltzel, his Lieutenant, concurred in the opinion, that the work could not be carried by assault, and retiring, the forces returned to their camps on the James. On the 2d of January, General Terry was sent with the same forces and an additional brigade of the Twenty-fourth Corps, to renew the attempt at the reduction of the fort. Ames' Division was selected to lead the assault. The three brigades composing his division were led respectively by Curtis, Pennypacker, and Bell. At a preconcerted signal, the fleet, which had been delivering a heavy fire upon the fort, changed its direction, so as to leave the ground free for the movements of the army, and Curtis dashed forward and carried a portion of the parapet. Pennypacker followed, overlapping Curtis' right, and drove the enemy from the palisading. In this charge the Two Hundred and Third moved under a storm of bullets and grape-shot, which rent its ranks with fearful effect. After reaching the palisades, an opening was found in front, which led to the fort, protected by two guns. Upon these the regiment was led at a run, and with a wild shout, and though suffering from a direct and decimating fire, the guns were taken. Without pausing, it was led on, and hand to hand, fighting with desperate valor, the first traverse was carried. The smaller openings were thus relieved, through which the men poured like a torrent. A footing was gained, though at a heavy cost. Colonel Pennypacker had fallen, and was reported mortally hurt, but there was no cessation in the fight. Traverse after traverse, seventeen in all, still remained to be overcome. Colonel Moore, with the flag in one hand, and his sword in the other, led gallantly on until three of the traverses were carried, and the fourth was being charged, when he fell dead, still grasping the flag staff, the banner riddled with bullets and more than half shot away. The enemy here made a desperate effort to regain his lost ground, but by equal valor was he met, and Lieutenant Colonel Lyman, the only field officer left, leading on his trusty men, and moving among them and encouraging by his example, succeeded in repulsing every charge. "The fifth traverse," says an eye witness, "had been taken. The fight was on the sixth mound. At the base of the mound Colonel Lyman met a rebel Major. Their swords crossed and flashed. I saw the contest, and saw the Colonel's sword fly from his hand. I hastened to reach him and give him aid, but stumbled and fell. When I recovered my feet, and caught sight of them again, the Major was in the act of rising from the ground, and the Colonel was drawing his revolver, with which he shot his antagonist dead. He recovered his sword coolly, called to the men and led a charge on the seventh traverse, but fell before it was taken, shot through the heart." From half-past three in the afternoon, until far into the night, this desperate struggle was maintained, when overcome and driven from the last traverse, the enemy finally yielded, and the victory was complete. But during those mortal hours, nearly half of the entire regiment had gone down in the fight. Forty-six were killed, and one hundred and forty-five wounded. Colonel Moore, Lieutenant Colonel Lyman, Captain Jacob T. Smallwood and Lieutenant Matthias Hart, were of the killed, and Captains Benjamin Brooke and Alexander M'Cune, and Lieutenants Charles B. Duncan, Peter Alt, William B. T. Boggs, and John S. Wetter of the wounded. Of Colonel Moore, General Ames says in his official report, "he behaved with the most distinguished gallantry. He was killed within the fort, in advance of his regiment. Few equaled, none surpassed this brave officer." The flag had over eighty rents made in it that day by bullets and grape shot. "These traverses," says Admiral Porter, "are immense bomb-proofs, about sixty feet long, fifty feet wide, and twenty feet high—seventeen of them in all, being on the north-east face. Between each traverse, are one or two heavy guns." "I have since visited," he again says, "Fort Fisher and its adjoining works, and find their strength greatly beyond what I had conceived. An engineer might be excusable in saying they could not be captured, except by regular siege. I wonder, even now, how it was done. The work as I said before, is really stronger than the Malakoff Tower, which defied so long the combined powers of France and England, and yet it was captured by a handful of men, under the fire of the guns of the fleet, and in seven hours after the attack commenced in earnest."

After the capture of Fort Fisher, the regiment lay quietly in camp until the 11th of February, when an advance was made on Wilmington. The enemy had a line of works across the Peninsula, from the Cape Fear River to the ocean, and this was first encountered. The regiment was thrown out as skirmishers, covering the brigade, and succeeded in getting the enemy's rifle pits in front of the works, but on account of the dense undergrowth and bushes, and the swampy nature of the ground, the line of battle could not advance. Once in the rifle-pits, and under the fierce fire of the enemy, without support, the regiment could not withdraw until night-fall, when, under cover of darkness, the men succeeded in crawling, man by man, stealthily away. Finding it impossible to break the lines at that point, the division was moved to the right bank of the river, and joined the command of General Schofield, who had just arrived with his army from the west. Moving up in rear of Fort Anderson, it was found abandoned, as well as the works which it commanded on the opposite side. Thus, what would have cost many lives by direct assault, was gained without firing a gun by a flank movement.

Re-crossing the river, the advance on Wilmington was resumed, and on the evening of the 20th, the enemy was found strongly intrenched at a point five miles from the city. Dispositions were made and an attack opened on the 21st, in which the regiment lost four wounded; but during the succeeding night, the enemy evacuated his works, and on the following morning, Wilmington, which had long been a principal resort for blockade runners, was entered. The enemy was pursued nine miles, when the Union column was halted, the bridge having been destroyed at that point, and soon after returned to camp near the city. Early in March, the columns were again put in motion towards Goldsboro, and formed junction with Sherman's army, while the battle of Bentonville was in progress. On the following day the regiment moved back to Faison's Station, where it was charged with guarding the line of railway. On the 10th of April, the columns were again put in motion towards Raleigh, the enemy retiring, as it advanced, without serious fighting, until the 18th of April, when Johnston made an agreement for the suspension of hostilities, and on the 26th finally surrendered, the war being substantially at an end. The regiment was then assigned to duty at Raleigh, where it remained until the 22d of June, when it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND FOURTH, FIFTH ARTILLERY.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in the county of Allegheny, though considerable numbers were from the counties of Lawrence, Beaver, Cambria, Westmoreland, Armstrong, and Greene. Recruiting was commenced in August, 1864, the men rendezvousing at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, where, on the 10th of September, an organization was effected by the selection of the following field officers: George S. Gallupe, formerly Major in the Eighth Reserve Regiment, Colonel; Joseph Browne, formerly Major of the One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania Regiment, Lieutenant Colonel; Michael Baer, Howard Morton, and George M. Irwin, Majors. Soon after its organization, it was ordered to Washington, and upon its arrival, was assigned to duty in the forts north of the Capitol. On the 28th, the regiment was sent out to cover the construction trains engaged in opening the Manassas Gap Railroad, and was posted by battalion along the line, the government purposing to make it the line of supply for Sheridan's army, then in the Shenandoah Valley. The First Battalion, under command of Major Morton, which was in rear of the other two, while at Salem, was suddenly attacked at noon of the 8th of October, by a superior force of Moseby's command, consisting of cavalry and artillery. Line of battle was formed, and details from the several companies were thrown out as skirmishers, but the enemy showing superior strength and opening with artillery, it was deemed prudent not to give battle, and the battalion began slowly to retire towards Rectortown, where the other battalions, under Lieutenant Colonel Browne, were stationed. Moseby followed closely, and in the progress of the movement, succeeded in cutting off and capturing Lieutenants Hay and Miltenberger, and twenty men of the skirmish company. On the 10th, Moseby took position on a hill, overlooking the ground which the regiment occupied at Rectortown, and opened a hot fire with his artillery, hoping thereby to prepare the way for a successful charge, and the capture of the trains and engines employed in re-constructing the road. The trains, however, being shielded by cuts of the road-bed, sustained no damage, and only three or four men in the regiment were killed and wounded. When this fire had been kept up about two hours, an advance on Moseby's front was made by one battalion, while a detachment of sharpshooters was sent by a detour, to approach secretly and pick off the gunners. Discovering the movement, Moseby withdrew, and took position on an eminence three miles away. On the following day, the regiment was ordered to return with the trains to White Plains. The enemy at once gave chase, and having destroyed the track in several places, made preparations for vigorous work. Leaving the First Battation at Rectortown, and placing the Second in front, and the Third in rear of the train, with skirmishers thrown out, the command moved forward. Two miles out, a bridge was found destroyed, compelling the train to stop at a point where it could be easily raked by the enemy, from a hill six hundred yards to the right and rear, which he designed to occupy; but the skirmishers of the regiment reached a position commanding it first, and when his advance appeared, poured in so hot a fire from their Sharp's rifles, that it compelled him to retire, and to move over to the head of a ravine down which he had intended to point his artillery. The troops in charge of the trains were, however, advised of this in time to save them from exposure. Skirmishing was kept up while the road was being repaired, but by skillful dispositions, the enemy was prevented from gaining any advantage. Near Salem, the road was again found broken, but a battalion of the Two Hundred and Second had, in the meantime, come up and taken position on an eminence commanding the road, and held the enemy in check, who was thereby prevented from gaining any favorable position for his artillery. On the following day, Moseby retired with his artillery to the mountain, and the Second and Third battalions moved back to Rectortown. A few days later, these battalions, under Lieutenant Colonel Browne, proceeded to Piedmont, to which point the railroad had been completed. A favorite pastime with Moseby had been to waylay trains, and throw them from the track when under full headway. As a means of protection, a number of prominent rebel citizens living along the line, were placed upon the trains, and for several weeks were kept riding up and down the road. This precaution had the desired effect, and the trains made their trips without molestation. A few weeks after arriving at Piedmont, two companies of this regiment, with a squadron of the Thirteenth New York Cavalry, moved by night into the mountains and succeeded in capturing Moseby's artillery, four pieces and caissons, and several prisoners, and brought them safely into camp at daylight. One of the guns, a twelve-pounder, had been presented to Moseby by General Early.

Shortly after the battle of Cedar Creek, the regiment returned to the forts north of Washington, tearing up and bringing away, in conjunction with other troops, the material of the road, as it came. In this position it remained but a few days, when it was again ordered to Virginia, and was posted for the winter, as follows: The First Battalion, under Major Baer, at Prospect Hill, on the pike leading from Chain Bridge to Leesburg; the Second Battalion, under Major Irwin, at Vienna, on the Loudon and Hampshire Railroad, and here was established the headquarters of the regiment; the Third Battalion, under Captain Kent, subsequently Major Hope, who had succeeded Major Morton, at Fairfax Court House. The regiment was engaged during the winter, in building immense stockades and block-houses, and the usual drill and picket duty. Expeditions were also sent out in the spring of 1865, to the Bull Run battle ground, where burying parties were for some time employed in interring the dead of the Second Bull Run battle, whose bodies had laid uncared for since the date of the battle. Nearly two thousand were buried, and monuments erected over their graves. In June, the regiment was ordered to Pittsburg, where it was received with imposing demonstrations, and where, on the 30th, it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTH REGIMENT.

COMPANIES A, C, and I of this regiment, were recruited in Blair county, B, E, and H in Berks, F, and K in Mifflin, D in Huntingdon, and G in Blair, Dauphin, and Franklin. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where, on the 2d of September, 1864, the following field officers were selected: Joseph A. Mathews, Colonel; William F. Walter, Lieutenant Colonel; B. Mortimer Morrow, Major. Colonel Mathews had served in the Forty-sixth, and in the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth, Lieutenant Colonel Walter in the One Hundred and Fourth, Major Morrow in the Eighty-fourth regiment, and a large proportion of the remaining officers and men were skilled in military duty. On the 5th, the regiment left Harrisburg, and proceeding to Washington, crossed the Potomac, and went into camp at Fort Corcoran. At the end of a week, it moved to Camp Distribution, and taking in charge thirteen hundred recruits and drafted men, proceeded with them by transports to City Point. Moving out four miles, it reported to General Benham, and under his direction, was engaged in picketing from the left of the army line, to the James, and in building forts and earth-works for the defense of City Point, nearly the entire regiment being called to duty daily. On the 9th of October, it was ordered to the Army of the James, and at the end of twenty days, during which it was employed on picket duty, it returned and proceeded to join the Army of the Potomac. With five other new Pennsylvania regiments, it formed a provisional brigade, commanded by General Hartranft, and was attached to the Ninth Corps. Early in December, this brigade moved to the relief of the Second and Fifth Corps, which were threatened with an attack by the enemy, while out upon a demonstration on the left. On the 15th of December, the six regiments composing this brigade, were organized into a division, which became the Third of the Ninth Corps, composed of two brigades, the Two Hundred and Fifth, Two Hundred and Seventh, and Two Hundred and Eleventh, forming the Second Brigade, to the command of which Colonel Mathews was assigned. General Hartranft commanded the division, and General Parke the corps. With the exception of occasional marches to the left, in support of aggressive movements, the regiment remained in camp, near Fort Prescott, on the Army Line Railroad during the winter, engaged in drill and fatigue duty, the division being held in reserve, just in rear of the other two divisions of the corps.

Before daylight, on the morning of the 25th of March, 1865, the regiment was summoned to arms, and ordered to stand in readiness to move upon the first signal, the enemy having broken through the line on Wilcox's front, and captured Fort Steadman. General Hartranft was quickly upon the ground where further disaster threatened, and gathering in the regiments of his division, attacked and checked the victorious onset of the enemy. The Two Hundred and Fifth was ordered to move down a ravine which ran in rear of the captured line, and when opposite Fort Haskell, was halted under cover, and held in support of the rest of the line, which was hotly engaged. For nearly an hour, impatient to move upon the defiant foe, it was forced to stand in waiting. Finally, when all his plans for a combined assault had been perfected, General Hartranft gave the signal to charge, and with a united front, and with the greatest determination and daring, the lines moved on, sweeping every thing before them, and re-gaining all that was lost. The Two Hundred and Fifth, moved at once to the support of the charging column, and held a large number of prisoners, small arms, and one battle-flag. The loss, fortunately, was but slight, being but ten wounded.

Of the part taken by the Two Hundred and Fifth, in the final assault upon the works before Petersburg, on the morning of the 2d of April, an idea will be best gained by the following extract from Captain Holmes' official report: "On the night of the 1st instant," he says, "at eleven o'clock, the regiment was ordered to form on the color line in front of the camp, Major Morrow in command. At one o'clock A. M., of the 2d, the regiment was moved towards, and on the Plank Road in rear of Fort Sedgwick, halted sometime, and then advanced by the right of the fort in the covered way, and formed in line of battle, with the Two Hundred and Seventh in front, directly in rear of our picket line. The order was given to charge the enemy's works at daylight, which was gallantly accomplished. The regiment captured Battery 30, with a number of prisoners; also one battle-flag fell into our hands, being captured by private John Lilly, of company F, who acted very gallantly throughout the engagement. This flag was forwarded to General Hartranft's headquarters, with a statement of its capture. Our colors were planted on the works, and remained there until the regiment was relieved. At this time, Major Morrow received a severe wound in the foot, and was taken off the field. I then assumed command, and remained with the regiment in the works, repulsing several charges made by the enemy during the day, and at night, assisted in placing the abatis in front of our works, under a severe enfilading fire from the enemy, remaining upon the line until two o'clock on the following morning, when I was ordered to move with the regiment to the rear of our picket line." In the advance upon the hostile works, and in driving out the enemy and holding the line when captured, the regiment was exposed to a fearful fire of infantry and artillery, from the effect of which it suffered heavy losses. Two officers, Lieutenants Henry A. Lower, and David B. Roberts, and twenty-two enlisted men were killed, six officers and ninety-one enlisted men were wounded, one officer, Samuel L. Hughes, mortally, and five men were missing, an aggregate loss of one hundred and twenty-six. Major Morrow lost a leg.

At daylight, the regiment was ordered to advance towards Petersburg; but everywhere the evidences of a general evacuation were observable, and on arriving within the city, it was found that the enemy had fired it in several places. By the aid of the fire companies, the flames were subdued, and the bridges crossing the Appomattox were saved. At noon the regiment returned to its former camp, and striking tents, started with the division to follow up the advantage. The progress to Burkesville Junction was slow, the command being charged with the repair of the the South Side Railroad as it went, and with keeping open this line of communication with the main body of the army. At Burkesville, the regiment remained until after the surrender of the rebel armies in the east, and hostile operations were at an end. It then proceeded via City Point to Alexandria, and encamped at Seminary Hill, where it remained until the 2d of June, when it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND SIXTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in the counties of Indiana, Westmoreland, and Jefferson, and was organized at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, on the 8th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Hugh J. Brady, Colonel; John T. Fulton, Lieutenant Colonel; Joseph B. Ferguson, Major. The field, staff, and line officers, were for the most part veterans, and the majority of the men had served in other organizations. On the day following its organization, it was ordered to Washington, but while en route, an order was received directing it to proceed from Baltimore by transport, to City Point, where, upon its arrival, it was temporarily assigned to a provisional brigade in the Army of the James, occupying the Bermuda front, attached to the Eighteenth Corps. On the 4th of October, the regiment was ordered to duty with the engineer corps, and crossing to the north bank of the James, was put to work upon a fort a mile north of Dutch Gap. It was here under fire of the enemy's guns, and had one man killed, and several wounded. So promptly and well was this work executed, that a complimentary order was issued by the commander of the Department, commending the energy and skill displayed, and in recognition of the service, directing the work to be called Fort Brady.

On the 26th of October, the regiment was ordered to report to General Terry, in command of the Tenth Corps, and was assigned to the Third Brigade of the First Division, where it was associated with the Eleventh Maine, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts, Tenth Connecticut, and One Hundredth New York. It was soon after placed in comfortable winter-quarters, on the line of works north of Fort Harrison, where every facility was afforded for drill and discipline that could be desired. By an order of the War Department, of the 3d of December, the Tenth and Eighteenth corps were merged, the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth corps being formed from them, the Twenty-fourth comprising all the white troops, and General Ord was placed in command of the Army of the James.

When the general movement of the army commenced on the 27th of March, 1865, the regiment was detached from the brigade, and ordered to remain in camp, reporting to General Devens, commanding the Third Division. This disposition was exceedingly distasteful to the command, and in response to a remonstrance made against it, the following communication from division headquarters was received: "I am directed by General Foster, to state that he regrets exceedingly, that your command should have been ordered to remain. The order came from Department Headquarters, and the General did all in his power to have it revoked, but could not." The convalescents of the First Division were ordered to report to Colonel Brady, who was directed to organize and hold them in readiness to move. On the 3d of April, the troops in front of Richmond were ordered to advance. It was soon discovered that the enemy had evacuated his works, and fired the city, so that the troops marched in without opposition. On the 22d, the regiment was relieved from General Devens' command, and ordered to report to General F. T. Dent, Military Governor, who assigned it to provost duty in the city. A month later, it returned to its brigade, Colonel Brady, as the ranking officer, assuming command. The regiment was soon after sent to Lynchburg, where it reported to General Gregg, and was, by him, assigned to provost duty in that town. It remained here for two weeks, and was then ordered to return to Richmond and re-join the division. On the 20th of June, no further service being required of it, it was mustered out of service, and ordered to Pittsburg, where, on the 2d of July, it was finally disbanded. In his farewell order, General Dandy, in command of the brigade, said: "Under your gallant commander, Colonel Hugh J. Brady, you were the first to enter Richmond, and to display in the capital of traitors, the Stars and Stripes of your country. Carry home with you, and bequeath it to your children, the red heart, the badge of the First Division. It is the symbol of deeds that will live when this present, and many succeeding generations, have passed away."

TWO HUNDRED AND SEVENTH REGIMENT.

COMPANIES A, D, H, K, and parts of B, E, and G of this regiment were recruited in Tioga county, C in Clinton, F in Cumberland and Franklin, I in Lycoming, and parts of B, E, and G in Bradford, York, and Lancaster. Recruiting was commenced about the middle of July, 1864, the companies rendezvousing at Camp Curtin, where, on the 8th of September, the regiment was organized with the following field officers: Robert C. Cox, who had served as Major of the One Hundred and Seventy-first Pennsylvania, Colonel; W. W. S. Snoddy, Lieutenant Colonel; Victor A. Elliott, Major. On the 12th, the regiment started for the front, and upon its arrival at City Point, was ordered to duty with the Army of the James. For four days it remained without shelter, awaiting orders. At the end of that time, it was directed to report to Colonel J. H. Potter's Brigade, and was assigned to picket duty on the Bermuda front, stretching from the Appomattox to the James. The picket lines were here in close proximity, at one point a rebel vidette standing at one end of a prostrate chestnut tree, and the Union at the other. In a ravine between the two lines, ran a cool, clear spring. Around this, soldiers occupying the out-posts of the two armies would gather, and for the time forgetting that they were enemies, would engage in the friendly conversation of comrades, and exchange papers for coffee and tobacco. On the 16th of November, this friendly spirit was suddenly broken, and at seven in the evening, the enemy charged upon the picket line. The regiment was ordered up to the support of the pickets, and a brisk engagement ensued, in which two were killed and a number wounded.

On the 24th of November, the regiment was transferred to the Ninth Corps, in the Army of the Potomac, and with that corps marched upon a demonstration upon the left, but did not become engaged. Upon its return to the Ninth Corps lines, then the extreme right, it went into camp upon the Army Line Railroad, near Fort Prescott, and was incorporated with the Third Division, composed of six Pennsylvania regiments, and commanded by General Hartman, forming with the Two Hundred and Fifth, and Two Hundred and Eleventh, the Second Brigade. On the 5th of February, 1865, the regiment joined in the movement to Hatcher's Run, the brigade being under the command of Colonel Cox. On reaching the run, it went into line of battle, heavy fighting at the time being in progress away to the left of the position occupied. At night orders were given to fortify. Substantial breast-works of logs and earth were thrown up, and the command held in momentary expectation of an attack. But none came, and after remaining in position four days, exposed to inclement weather, it returned to camp. Until the 25th of March, the routine of duty was little disturbed. At a little before daylight on the morning of that day, it was suddenly aroused by heavy firing upon the front. Soon after, orders were received to prepare for action and a rapid movement to the point of attack, Fort Steadman and portions of the line to right and left of it, having been assaulted and carried by the enemy. At six o'clock the order to move was received, and marching at double quick, and passing the Avery House, where was General Hartranft's headquarters, and where the pace was slackened to a quick step, proceeded down a ravine, just in rear of the line, until it had come to a point nearly opposite Fort Steadman, when it was halted and took shelter beneath the abrupt bank. The fire of infantry and artillery was incessant, but owing to the protection afforded by the position, little loss was here sustained. When the signal for the general advance by the whole division was given, at a little after eight, the regiment promptly responded; but scarcely had the movement begun, when the Colonel commanding the brigade ordered a halt. Four companies under Colonel Cox, not receiving the order, kept on at a run, and entered the fort with the advanced lines. The remaining companies, after a momentary pause, were again ordered forward, and entered the breast-works and redoubt to the left of Fort Steadman, taking many prisoners and one battle-flag. Emerging, as this regiment did, from cover, where the enemy had no suspicion that troops were concealed, and moving at a run, he had no time to bring his guns to bear upon it before it was upon him. The loss on this account was slight, being but one killed and sixteen wounded. The guns of the fort and batteries were again turned upon the enemy, and the breach was in a short time repaired. The regiment then returned to camp.

A little after three o'clock, on the morning of April 2d, the Two Hundred and Seventh was led out, and formed in line of battle, directly in front of Fort Sedgwick, the left of the regiment resting on the Jerusalem Plank Road, the other two regiments of the brigade being formed in its rear, and those of the First Brigade, as a reserve, just inside the picket line. Potter's Division was formed to the left of Hartranft's, and a portion of Wilcox's, which had been ordered to report to Hartranft, upon the right, a combined assault having been ordered upon a concerted signal, all along the lines. The enemy's artillery and mortar batteries were already in full play, the sky being ablaze with bursting shells and the fiery trails of the mortar missiles. Just at daybreak, a signal rocket was sent up from the centre of the line, and the order to advance was given. In the face of a murderous fire of grape and canister, and musketry at short range, Colonel Cox led his regiment, closely followed by the rest of the brigade, across the picket line, cleared the picket line of the enemy, paused a moment at the double line of chevaux-de-frise, where strong hands seized the obstructions which the pioneers were busy in breaking, and opening them like gates, rushed through, and with a wild shout carried the enemy's main line, planting the regimental colors upon the fort which commanded the Jerusalem Plank Road. Turning to the left, the brigade, for now the regiments had become mingled, rushed on and captured three other works with five pieces of artillery. The guns were immediately wheeled upon the enemy, and dispositions made to hold the line. Repeated attempts were made to re-take it, but each assault of the foe was repulsed with great slaughter. In speaking of the assault, Colonel Cox, in his official report, says: "Officers and men fell on every side. My Color Sergeant, George J. Horning, fell, pierced with seven balls, and three of the color-guard fell wounded by his side. Sergeant C. H. Ilgenfrits of company E, sprang forward and raised the colors, and my men rushed over the enemy's works, and planted the colors on their fort." Colonel Mathews, in command of the brigade, in his official report, says: "To Colonel R. C. Cox, who commanded the leading regiment, I owe the entire good success that attended the charge. Foremost among those who scaled the enemy's works, cheering his men by his courage, preparing them to meet the many charges of the enemy to re-take the lines, and thus beating them back each time, with heavy losses in killed and wounded, he is deserving of the highest praise." At ten o'clock A. M., Colonel Mathews, who, though suffering from illness, had remained at the fort, directing the movements, was relieved, and Colonel Cox succeeded to the command of the brigade. A very heavy fire was kept up on both sides, the enemy still holding an inner line, and one of his batteries away to the left, which still held out, and which partially enfiladed the position, greatly annoying the command. When the enemy's ammunition, found in the fort, was exhausted, squads from the regiment were sent back to Fort Sedgwick to bring up fresh supplies. The ground which they had to traverse, was commanded by the enemy's guns, and many were killed while crossing it; but enough was brought to keep the guns in play until four P. M., when the firing ceased. The entire loss in the engagement was thirty-seven killed, one hundred and forty wounded, and eight missing, an aggregate of one hundred and eighty-five. Captain James Carothers was among the killed, and Lieutenants Alonzo R. Case and Allen G. Dodd, among the mortally wounded. Ten officers were wounded.

At four o'clock on the morning of the 3d, the division was pushed forward into the city, but found it evacuated. After remaining about two hours, the regiment retraced its steps, crossed the lines, where, for upwards of nine months armed men had stood in deadly conflict, now silent and deserted, and returning to camp, made preparations to move in pursuit. The division was charged with keeping open the line of supply which was along the South Side Railroad. At Burkesville, the column halted, and the Two Hundred and Seventeenth was engaged in picket duty, and in taking charge of, and paroling rebel prisoners. Shortly after the surrender of Lee, it returned to City Point, and thence to Alexandria. It went into camp a short distance from the city, where it remained until the 13th of May, when the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND EIGHTH REGIMENT.

THE original organizations of companies E, F, G, and I, were made from recruits from Perry county, A and D, from Snyder, B from Blair, C from Lebanon and Dauphin, and H, and K from Bedford. These companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were filled to the maximum strength, and where a gimental organization was completed on the 12th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Alfred B. McCalmont, Colonel; M. T. Heintzelman, Lieutenant Colonel; Alexander Bobb, Major. Colonel McCalmont had served as Colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-second regiment, and Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelmen in the Tenth, Seventy-sixth, and One Hundred and Seventy-second regiments. On the day following its organization, it started for the front, and upon its arrival, was assigned to duty in a provisional brigade, commanded by Colonel J. N. Potter, of the Twelfth New Hampshire, on the Bermuda Hundred front. It was here engaged in picket duty, fatigue duty in building roads, and in drill, until the 27th of November, when it was ordered to report to the Army of the Potomac. Soon after reaching the right bank of the Appomattox, it was put upon the march for the Weldon Railroad, but returned without meeting the enemy. It was assigned to the Ninth Corps, where it became part of the First Brigade, Third Division, and was associated with the Two Hundredth, and Two Hundred and Ninth regiments. The division was posted in rear of the Ninth Corps line, as a reserve, and was commanded by General Hartranft. The regiment was encamped to the right of the Avery House, the headquarters of General Hartranft, and nearly in the centre of the division. During the winter comparative quiet reigned, and though a terrible and almost ceaseless cannonade was kept up, none of the missiles reached the camps, except those of one gun, a sixty-four pounder, which was occasionally opened and was directed towards the Avery House. There was, however, little accuracy of aim, and they soon came to be regarded as harmless. Upon the occasion of the grand movement upon Hatcher's Run, in February, 1865, by the Second and Fifth corps, the division was sent to their support, and occupied a position on the line where the Union forces had been repulsed in a similar attempt to extend the line to the left, in the August previous. The ground was fortified, but the enemy did not attack, and after an absence of nearly a week, it returned to camp.

Upon the first signal of alarm, early on the morning of the 25th of March, when the Union lines were broken at Fort Steadman, and the fort and several batteries were captured, General Hartranft, who was quickly aroused, and ready for action, sent the Two Hundred and Eighth, which was nearest to his headquarters, under Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelman, in the absence of Colonel M'Calmont, and accompanied by Colonel Diven, in command of the brigade, to report to General M'Laughlin, having command of a brigade of the First Division upon the portion of the line captured. Moving hastily towards the scene of disaster, the regiment was brought into position on the right of General M'Laughlin's headquarters, the left resting within one hundred yards of Fort Haskell, and facing northward. A number of squads from the Third Brigade of the First Division, numbering some two hundred, chiefly from the One Hundredth Pennsylvania, were placed on the left of the Two Hundred and Eighth, making the line continuous to Fort Haskell. Upon coming into position, the enemy was discovered, having advanced upon the rear of the Union lines, and two or three well directed volleys were poured in upon him with good effect, causing him to fall back in some confusion, to the cover of a ravine. Encouraged by the advantage gained, a charge was immediately ordered, and he was driven from the ravine to the cover of Battery 12, and the line of works connecting the battery with Fort Haskell. The position thus gained, the regiment held without wavering, though the enemy kept up a steady fire upon it from a sheltered position. In the meantime, the Two Hundredth and Two Hundred and Ninth regiments, under General Hartranft, in person, had been brought up on the right of the break, and though encountering most determined opposition, had checked the rebel onset, and were holding him at bay, and the three regiments of the Second Brigade had been brought within close supporting distance. At this juncture, General Hartranft received an order from General Parke, in command of the corps, to re-take the lost lines, and his troops being in readiness, he gave the order to assault. Before Colonel Diven could reach Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelman with the order to advance, which he had received, the lines began to move forward. Eager to be with the foremost, without awaiting orders, Heintzelman gave the signal to advance, and in the most gallant manner, Battery 12, and the lines to the right and left of it were carried. In the folds of the battery, one hundred prisoners were taken, and along the line, two hundred and fifty more, including a Colonel, Adjutant, and several line officers. The men of the Two Hundred and Eighth were of hardy habits, and were skilled in the use of the rifle, and when ordered to fire, took deadly aim, sweeping all before them. Among rebel prisoners they had the reputation of being sharpshooters. At the moment when the final charge was made, Colonel Diven was struck by the fragment of a shell, and the command devolved on Lieutenant Colonel M'Call, of the Two Hundredth regiment. The loss was four killed and thirty-eight wounded. Captain Prosper Dallen and Lieutenant F. W. Keller, were among the mortally wounded. Captain Dallen was an officer of great merit, and was serving as acting engineer officer on the staff of General Hartranft. He was a native of France, educated at Nancy and at the military school at St. Oyr, had served through the Italian wars of 1859, as Lieutenant of Cavalry, and was brevetted Captain, and presented with two medals for gallant conduct at Solferino, by Napoleon III.

After the re-taking of the main line, the picket line was re-established, and Captain Shollar of company B, was detailed as brigade officer in charge. The enemy's dead were delivered under flag of truce, many of whom were found to have been shot in the head, and a large proportion were lying in front of the position occupied by the Two Hundred and Eighth. "When you were about to make your final charge," said a rebel officer to Captain Shollar, "a council of war was being held by our Generals; but it was the shortest council of war you ever saw; for when they beheld such magnificent lines advancing, they adjourned, by each taking to his heels without ceremony.

The attack had been so sudden, and the disaster was so appalling, that when the joyful tidings came, that Hartranft's single division, almost unaided, had successfully stemmed the current of disaster, and had triumphantly retrieved all that was lost, the feeling of exultation and gratitude knew no bounds. Especially was this feeling shared at army headquarters, and by the President, and Secretary of War. The following communication from General Parke, accompanying one from General Meade, touching the prompt promotion of General Hartranft to Major General, illustrates this feeling. "The commanding General instructs me to transmit herewith, a copy of communication from the commanding General of the Army of the Potomac, of yesterday's date, which will explain itself. He bids me say, however, in connection therewith, that such prompt recognition of your services on the 25th instant, by the President, Lieutenant General, and the Major General commanding this army, affords him the greatest pleasure, and he begs you will accept his hearty congratulations on your well deserved promotion." The letter of General Meade to General Parke, was in these words: "The commanding General directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, recommending Brigadier General Hartranft, United States Volunteers, for the brevet of Major General of Volunteers, for his conspicuous gallantry in re-capturing Fort Steadman, during the action of the 25th instant, as well as for his industry in organizing and disciplining his division, composed of new regiments. In reply, I am directed to inform you, that before the receipt of your letter, a recommendation of this same effect had been made by the commanding General, to Lieutenant General Grant, to which a response was received, that this nomination had been made to the Secretary of War, and a telegraphic answer returned, 'the appointment shall be made.' Since then, the commanding General has been informed by telegraph, that Brigadier General Hartranft is brevetted Major General, and that the appointment has been forwarded by mail. Your recommendation is, however, forwarded, to complete the record."

When affairs had become settled upon the lately broken and disordered front, the regiment was relieved from duty, and returned to its quarters. The night of the 26th, was the last spent in camp. After that, it was kept in motion until daylight on the morning of the 2d of April, when it joined in the attack upon the rebel works in front of Fort Sedgwick. It was of the assaulting column, and with unflinching determination, moved over the ground, where the enemy's missiles, from small arms and powerful batteries, dealt death and destruction on every hand. His strong works were carried, and his guns, which had for many months belched forth their fiery flame upon the Union lines, were turned upon his retreating troops. At an inner line he made a stand, and during the long day he kept up a desperate fire, and made determined struggles to re-gain his lost ground. In one of these assaults, he succeeded in carrying a portion of the line held by detachments sent to the help of the division and posted upon the left of the regiment; with great bravery it resisted the attack, and though suffering from an enfilading fire, held the position until relief came, and the abandoned ground was re-taken. At night the fire began to slacken, and pickets were thrown upon the front, Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelman being division officer. At a little before daylight, General

Hartman ordered him to advance and feel the enemy. Cautiously the pickets moved forward, but they found the works abandoned. The columns were speedily put in motion, and on entering Petersburg, it was found that the enemy had escaped across the Appomattox, and was flying southward. After remaining until noon, the regiment returned to camp, and made preparations to join in the pursuit. The loss in this engagement was nine killed and thirty-nine wounded. The regiment moved with the division upon the line of the South Side Railroad to Nottoway Court House, which it reached on the 9th, where the news of the surrender of Lee was received. Here it remained until the 20th, when returning via Petersburg to City Point, it proceeded to Alexandria, and encamped near the seminary, and subsequently south of the town. The men now became exceedingly impatient to return home, many of them being farmers, and seed-time rapidly passing. But not until the first of June, were arrangements perfected for their release. On that day, the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment was mustered out of service.
